"Fine how- do-you-do... a Problem Pop!"

POP: A problem P—? Now, what have I done, Precious—I mean, Precocious?

PAT: Why, Pop, you brushed your teeth without ...

POP: Without Ipana? I did not!

PAT: Worse'n that, Pop! You brushed your teeth without massaging your gums!

POP: So-o-o-o, Worry Wart?

PAT: Well, we're taught in school to massage our gums every time we brush our teeth. Because the soft, creamy foods folks eat today don't give gums the exercise they need to keep firm and healthy. 'N' sound teeth call for healthy gums!

POP: Okay, okay...Now, I suppose you're going to tell me what to do for this "pink" on my tooth brush.

PAT: You bet I am! "Pink tooth brush" means see your dentist right away!

POP: I don't know whether to spank you or thank you, Smarty Pants. But I have an idea you're right ...

What many parents still don't know is being taught their children in thousands of the nation's classrooms today: the importance of regular gum massage to sound, sparkling teeth.

What's more—a national survey shows that 7 out of 10 dentists recommend regular massage to help strengthen flabby, tender gums and thus protect teeth.

Lazy, under-exercised gums may flash you a warning signal—a tinge of "pink" on your tooth brush. When you see that—see your dentist right away. As so many do, he may suggest "the helpful stimulation of Ipana and massage."

For Ipana Tooth Paste, with massage, is specially designed to protect the health of your gums by speeding up circulation in lazy tissues. So, it isn't surprising that a nationwide survey shows that twice as many dentists use Ipana for their own teeth as any other dentifrice!

HONORABLY DISCHARGED—FROM DEAFNESS!

BILL'S HEARING WAS BLASTED IN NORMANDY—and the Army moved right in to help him. Soon he found himself in an elaborate rehabilitation hospital, where prompt and intelligent treatment promised well for his future—

THE ARMY TAUGHT HIM TO HEAR AGAIN—realizing how much more there is to hearing again than just having a hearing aid. The background of his case was painstakingly studied. Audiometric tests gave an accurate picture of his tone loss—

THESE TWO BUTTONS say, "Ready for immediate employment!" One is the official emblem of honorable service in the armed forces. The second is the Sonotone button that puts good men back into good jobs.

The thousands of veterans whose hearing injuries are compensated with efficient modern hearing instruments have the right to expect real futures. Throughout the war, great numbers of men with similar hearing "disability" have licked nearly every kind of job from production line to executive office . . . unhandicapped, thanks to Sonotone!

The veteran can do the same. Recent technical advances in hearing instruments, including far greater power and closer fitting to the individual's needs, now bring effective hearing even to many degrees of hearing loss that have been considered "hopeless". The new Sonotone "600" is a truly amazing instrument . . . but even more important to uninterrupted good hearing on the job is Sonotone's unique nation-wide system of personal service. 207 Sonotone offices across the country are always available to the veteran in your firm who wears a Sonotone—so he may come in anywhere, anytime, for instrument refittings and repairs, or for personal help and counsel in maintaining the best possible hearing.

And so, Mr. Employer, when you meet this young man with two badges, you may repay a great service and do another for yourself. One large firm reports typically on 1800 rehabilitated World War II veterans . . . "Our most conscientious men . . . less liable to accident and absence than the average."

BILL CHOSE A SONOTONE, LEARNED NEW SKILLS—Navy and Army veterans get their choice of the finest modern instruments. Bill chose Sonotone because, besides good hearing, it offered personal service and help across America for life—

HE HEARS WELL AND WANTS A GOOD JOB—Armed with the Service's wonderful start, the advanced Sonotone "600" and continuing help from Sonotone Consultants, there are almost no jobs Bill can't perform as well as anybody.

We are short of Long Distance telephone circuits now

but

We plan to add 2,100,000 miles of them to the Bell System in the next twelve months.

That is as many Long Distance circuits as there were in Great Britain and France before the war. That may not be enough, the way people want to talk now, but if you will give us a little time we will get circuits enough no matter how many you want.

Our program is more circuits, more jobs, and a return to Bell System standards of service just as soon as it can be done.

Far and away the best of the new synthetic tooth brush bristles, being marketed under various trade names, are those made by duPont. "Prolon" is our trade name for the very finest grade of this duPont synthetic bristle.

PROLON—no finer bristle made

So, when you read or hear competitive tooth brush claims, ask yourself this: How can the same duPont bristle, in another brush under another name, last longer or clean better than under the name "Prolon" in a Pro-phy-lac-tic Tooth Brush? You know the answer... it can't!

Only PROLON has "round ends"

Pro-phy-lac-tic's big plus is that Prolon is the only synthetic bristle that is rounded at the ends.

It's a fact! Under a special patented process, exclusive with Pro-phy-lac-tic, we smooth and round the end of each and every bristle in the Pro-phy-lac-tic Prolon Tooth Brush. See for yourself how much gentler these round ends are on tender gums!

And with PROLON these other "extras"

In addition to round-end bristles, the Pro-phy-lac-tic Prolon Tooth Brush gives you these three important "extras": 1. The famous Pro-phy-lac-tic end tuft, for ease in reaching hard-to-get-at back teeth. 2. Scientific grouping of bristles to permit thorough cleansing of brush after using. 3. A written guarantee for six full months of use.

Next time, get the most for your money!

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

PARTIES AND POVERTY

Sirs:

I have just spent a fascinating few minutes with your story of ex-Senator Elkins' $15,000 debutante party for his daughter in Washington (LIFE, Jan. 14). If you don't get a lot of mail on this story then a lot of our citizens have lost their capacity for irritation. . . .

EDWARD PRICE EHRLICH

Sirs:

On page 39 of LIFE a Chinese child lies dead. . . .

Yet on page 112 a father spends $15,000 to introduce his daughter to a well-chosen group of friends, most of whom have already known her for years.

LIFE is to be congratulated on presenting a most graphic picture which ought to make us all stop and think. Whether or not we will is a moot point. Let us hope we can.

Sirs:

. . . I felt like being sick. I wonder just how many children $15,000 would have saved?

SHANNON H. ABBOTT

Sirs:

. . . In consulting the buyer for the Unitarian Service Committee of our church I found that for the $15,000 squandered by one family in one night you can buy, at wholesale prices, 720,000 cans of food—the caloric value sufficient to feed 2,000 people for one month. . . .

HELENA G. FENN

• The cost of Miss Elkins' party is well above the average for debuts. But it is small compared to Eleanor Hutton's coming out in 1929 which cost a reported $75,000. That same year Cousin Barbara Hutton spent $50,000 on decorations alone. Also in the same year Edith Drexel Gould spent $20,000 for debut decorations, but this in turn was small compared to Edith's mother's debut, which had cost $250,000.—ED.

Sirs:

. . . Why do some girls like Katherine Elkins have to have all the luck? On March 26 I become 18, and I'll bet that even the people in our small town won't know about it, while half the U.S. knows about Miss Elkins. Oh, for a party such as she had!

"EX-INFANTRYMAN"

Sirs:

Through the kindness of an American friend in Paris I saw the great movie, Ernie Pyle's G.I. Joe. It was this movie that prompted me to paint a "Portrait of an Ex-Infantryman." I searched through all of Paris, in every club patronized by GIs, for just the right subject, one whose eyes had a distant sadness. In my portrait I have captured this sadness, a quality that remains in the eyes of all front-line soldiers who lived in constant danger and who knew much suffering and death. My painting has drawn much comment in Paris; there is an almost fatal and mysterious quality about the eyes. I would like America and Americans to see my painting of one of your own. My subject, selected from more than 500 infantrymen is M/Sgt.

Tom Hernandez of Bayonne, N.J., former platoon sergeant with the 36th Division in France, now attached to Hqs. 16th Port in Le Havre, France.

Many thanks and many greetings from your good friend and ally and from our gay Paris.

THE "MET"

Sirs:

Your article on the Metropolitan Opera (LIFE, Jan. 14) is very timely, as far as I'm concerned, especially the reference to the labyrinthian passages. Early this week I ventured backstage to visit Eleanor Steber, Wagnerian soprano, between scenes of Die Meistersinger, so I could get some material for my parodies on opera for the Texaco Star Theater program.

I entered the staid and august Metropolitan Opera House on the 39th Street side, according to instructions given me earlier in the day. When I stated my mission at the door, they assigned me a guide. They should have supplied a St. Bernard, too, with at least a bottle of soda strapped on him.

We started on our trek to Mme Steber's room full of vim, vigor and vital statistics. First, we climbed up some stairs, then climbed down. Maybe that was a subway tunnel we were going over. We made a turn to the right, then a turn to the left and another turn to the right. We found ourselves in a dark corridor and I had to follow my guide by sense of smell. He was doused in hair tonic... We mounted some more stairs, descended others, made a quick turn to the right and practically fell right into Miss Steber's room. She brought me to with some refreshments. We had a wonderful time, and I felt fortified for my return journey to the exit. I said bravely to the guide, "Let's start the long voyage back." So-o-o-o-o the guide replied, "Oh, no, Mr. Wynn, there's an exit right here, which leads out to 40th Street. If you had only come in that way, you wouldn't even need a guide!"

Well, I guess opera will always be full of long-winded passages.

ED WYNN

New York, N.Y.

Sirs:

A couple of weeks ago I had a date to meet a friend (with tickets) at the Metropolitan Opera House, but my friend didn't show up. Nevertheless I resolved that I was going to see the opera, regardless. I managed to get into conversation with a doorman and discovered that there was a way that I could see the opera. It seemed that I could be a supernumerary. (A supernumerary in the opera is the same as an extra in the movies.) I was taken below and fitted into a 16th Century garb, which consisted of tight stockings, tights all colors of the rainbow and a fantastic-looking hat and blouse. I really felt quite out of place. The opera was Die Meistersinger, and I was to be a musician at the carnival... Then we got our cue. I stepped out onto the stage with the others and I felt a surge of delight. It was not stage fright; I was too amazed... Here I was on the stage of the world-famous Metropolitan Opera. Me on the stage, and the Vanderbilts and the Rockefellers and the Van Cortlandts out there. Never before did I see such finery. This was to me a dream come true, a fantastic dream. From the streets of Toledo, Ohio to the stage of the Met. After the performance I had a talk with the supernumerary "boss" and found that I could come again for the Opera Tosca. Believe me, I was there...

CHILD OF DIVORCE

Sirs:

I have been an enthusiastic subscriber to your magazine for years and have shuddered on several occasions at various atrocities depicted in its pages, but the "Child of Divorce" (LIFE, Jan. 14) is the most pathetic of all. The correct caption would have been "Atrocity on the Home Front."

Any woman who has won so completely the adoration of her child has proved herself a good mother in spite of any court rulings. And any man who could complacently lean against a wall with a smirk on his face, while his own child is figuratively having her heart torn out, is no father—much less a man.

If this is a case of Chicago justice, thank God I live elsewhere.

VIRGINIA H. CARTER

Latonia, Ky.

● Another hearing in this case has now been granted by the Chicago courts. Meanwhile the mother is allowed to visit her child every day from 3 to 6.—ED.

RESORT FASHIONS

Sirs:

In regard to the new resort fashions shown in Bermuda (LIFE, Jan. 14)... WOW!

PVT. TOM WEAVER

Camp Pickett, Va.

Sirs:

Please! Were those creatures modeling resort wear related to anything human? After all the depressing war pictures, why do you continue to print pictures of emaciated and starving females? Weren't those prison-camp men pitiful enough?... They aren't just plain skinny and knock-kneed. They're grotesque! No kidding, were they really alive? I hope not, because they seemed to be suffering so much.

GEORGE ANDERSON

Staten Island, N.Y.

Sirs:

It has been my observation and experience that anyone can get out of a bathing suit while in the water. The question is: how does the gal who wears the "Moonlight Buoy" suit get back into it?

JAMES W. BOYDEN

Mount Carmel, Conn.

● She treads water.—ED.

Sirs:

After looking over these new bathing-suit styles I would like to suggest a novelty suit for bathers who like to swim in the raw. It's simply a wooden barrel fitted with hand holds, rope and anchor. The wearer dons this suit, wades into the water, casts the anchor, slips out of the bottom and swims away. Very simple, isn't it? No bras and panties to cling to or get lost. The barrel could be lined with satin.

"Now I know why Mother bragged!"

FUNNY, how sometimes things your mother tells you don't register till years later!

Take Mrs. Matt Wilminko of Floodwood, Minnesota, for instance. She often used to hear her mother brag about the Pequot Sheets she owned. How firm and smooth they were. How white they kept. How wonderfully they wore!

Daughter, alas, took scant note of these comments. To her, sheets were sheets.

But . . . years later, Mrs. Wilminko inherited those family Pequots. And listen to who's bragging now! We quote from her recent letter to us:

"My husband is a woods logger, and employs several men. I assure you those Paul Bunyans handle their sheets (Mother's Pequots!) none too gently. Nevertheless, it's only now, after years of hard use, that I've begun to notice thin spots, and an occasional hole."

Yes, even Pequot Sheets wear out eventually. The wonder is, it took them so long! Says Mrs. Wilminko:

"No wonder Mother bragged! I want to tell you Pequot people, you really have something!"

If your mother didn't tell you, why not benefit by Mrs. Wilminko's experience? When you need sheets, get Pequots!

DAVID BURLIUK twists a frame out of accepted pattern.

SPEAKING OF PICTURES . . .

... PHOTOGRAPHER CATCHES SPIRIT OF MODERN ARTISTS

The man peeping through the picture frame above is David Burliuk, a Russian-born U.S. artist whose mobile and colorful paintings do not fit into the generally accepted artistic conventions. Accordingly, when Arnold Newman photographed Artist Burliuk he posed him grappling with this frame as if to twist it out of its conventional shape. This kind of photography is the new technique Newman has developed in an attempt to capture the personalities of most of the contemporary artists of the U.S. His attempt has been highly successful as the pictures presented here show.

Photographer Newman's experiments are currently on exhibition at the Philadelphia Museum of Art, alongside the works of these artists. The Philadelphia exhibition is the result of five years' work by Photographer Newman. But 27-year-old Newman, who was born in New York City and knows most of the artists well, has received another, more tangible result from his experiment. All of the artists he has photographed have presented him with original examples of their work.

PIET MONDRIAN, who died in 1944, was posed as another straight line in the rectilinear, curveless designs he did (LIFE, July 2). Mondrian never used curves in his abstract paintings.

GEORGE GROSZ (opposite page) poses with rose-garlanded female torso to suggest his sensuous technique. Cast of male body indicates his Germanic love for accuracy.

CHAIM GROSS (above), Austrian-born sculptor, poses dreamily over his dreamy statue called Mother and Child. Gross tries to ally his subject with grain of wood he uses.

Allan Grant, who took the pictures of the Pittsburgh steel strike (pp. 17-23), became a professional photographer 18 months ago. Previously the camera had been a hobby with him. After six months of professional photography he made LIFE's cover. He has recently done stories for LIFE on Jane Russell and her husband (LIFE, Dec. 17) and Fiorello LaGuardia's last day as New York's mayor (LIFE, Jan. 14). Grant is 26, a native New Yorker, married and father of two young sons.

HOW I'M GOING TO RETIRE IN 15 YEARS ON $150 A MONTH

"A few months ago, I never dreamed I'd be set to retire and take life easy—in just fifteen years—with $150 a month, every month, regular as the postman, for the rest of my life. Yet, today at 45, that's what I'm looking forward to.

"Oh, I used to wish I could afford to retire. To quit work some day and relax, enjoy my home and travel a bit. If I could only save enough, and invest it wisely enough...

"But saving seemed hopeless for me. Even though I had a good job and a fair income, I spent money as fast as I made it. I didn't seem able to put anything aside for the day when I might want to retire—or have to. And it worried me.

"It looked as if I'd just go on, like so many people, living in a circle, working until I died. But one day I came across a booklet that opened my eyes. It told how a man or woman can make his salary now buy a retirement income later! Just as civil service employees have been doing for years. There was no secret, except to start in time. The younger the better.

"It's called the Phoenix Mutual Retirement Income Plan. As soon as I read about it, I knew this was just what I needed. It could change my whole life. I investigated further, and, not long after, I qualified for a Phoenix Mutual Plan. Today, with an income of $150 a month guaranteed to me for life when I reach 60, I can look forward to comfort and happiness as long as I live."

This story is typical. As thousands of people have discovered, you don't have to be rich to retire. A Phoenix Mutual Plan can give you security—a future with no money worries.

Suppose, for instance, you're a man of 45, and would like to get an income of $150 a month at age 60. To those who qualify, this typical Phoenix Mutual Plan guarantees:

A Monthly Check for $150 . . . You get a check for $150 when you reach age 60, and a check for $150 every month thereafter as long as you live.

Security for Your Wife . . . Your wife gets a monthly life income if you should die before retirement age.

A Disability Income . . . You get a monthly disability income if, before you reach age 55, serious illness or accident should stop your earning power for six months or more.

The Plan is not limited to men of 45. You may be older or younger. The income is not limited to $150 a month. Assuming you start at a young enough age, you can plan to get $10 to $200 a month or more—starting at age 55, 60, 65, or 70. Similar Plans are available for women.

THE BARBECUE... An Old American Institution

Sociability and good food . . . plenty of both . . . make the barbecue. In old plantation days, barbecues were usually large private parties. Now they are more often community affairs, sometimes political rallies. But always they are characterized by good neighborly fun. Consumed are quantities of richly sauced, spicy, barbecued meat, cole slaw, cornbread, gallons of coffee. Brunswick stew (a meaty half-stew, half soup) is often served.

This picture story of a real Down South Barbecue (Selby Gardens near Winston-Salem, North Carolina) depicts traditional procedure . . . shows how authentic methods and recipe may be adapted, and savory delights of barbecued meat enjoyed, right in your own home.

"Swedging does the trick" says barbecue expert. Even an ordinary roast of pork, tastes like "food gone to heaven" if basted during the cooking with an honest-to-goodness barbecue sauce. Each expert has his own private, special, secret recipe—usually employing several of Heinz famous 57 Varieties—Condiments in particular.

Log fires (preferably of oak or black gumwood) are started 36 hours ahead of time, kept going all night. Live coals are transferred with shovels to half-filled pit about two feet deep. Whole hogs—150 pounds are best—are split, well-salted, laid over green branches or on grid above coals—roasted skin-side-up 8 to 10 hours, turned, then frequently "swedged" with sauce. Then they are cooked 8 to 10 hours longer—until temptingly tender.

The aroma of wood fires, roasting meat and aromatic sauce is irresistible. Home-size version of a famous barbecue sauce calls for 1 cup Heinz Distilled White Vinegar, 1 cup Heinz Tomato Ketchup, ½ cup Heinz Chili Sauce, 2 tablespoons Heinz Worcestershire Sauce, 2 tablespoons Heinz "57-Sauce" and ½ teaspoon black pepper. Combine all ingredients, simmer 30 minutes. Serve over beef or pork. You'll like its racy flavor. 57

Good . . . good . . . good . . . is the verdict when the well-roasted, spice-drenched meat is finally taken from the bone, chopped not too fine, mixed with more of the same delicious barbecue sauce. Heinz cooking experts, ever on the lookout for quick, time- and work-saving ways to eat well, suggest that you barbecue your next pork roast, or spare ribs. Keep a supply of barbecue sauce on hand to use on hamburgers, chops, broilers.

PICKET GEORGE BAXTER, 60, STEELWORKER, FOR 30 YEARS, WARMS HIS HANDS OVER A FIRE IN AN ASHCAN OUTSIDE U. S. STEEL'S OPEN HEARTH AT HOMESTEAD

THE GREAT STEEL STRIKE BEGINS

In the early morning a cold wind blew into the old steel town of Homestead, Pa. It funneled through the emptied mills and hearths of the U.S. Steel plants, picked up dust and papers in the steep alleys, tossed them against the shabby houses. The steelworkers slept late, read the papers, walked in the streets. There was no need to worry about the plants: slowly, carefully the flow of gases had been reduced in the furnaces. Cooling was gradual, the bricks hardening as the fires failed. The vast mills, usually swelling with the tremendous noise of steel, grew quiet.

Late in the afternoon Frank Casper, president of Local 1397, United Steelworkers of America, came back from a basketball game to the local office. He held a brief meeting with his strike committee. There was little to do; all arrangements were already made; instructions already given.

When the general strike session began at 8, it was merely perfunctory and was over by 9:45.

After dark, snow had begun to fall. The wind was still blowing and it drove the stinging snow against the faces of the first pickets as they appeared at Main Gate, Amity Street Gate, "Hole in the Wall" Gate. Some of them spotted a shivering stray dog, hung a picket sign on him. A pretty girl walked up and down the line, kissing the older men, hugging the younger. Shouts of "woo-woo" and "huba-huba" filled the night. At midnight the last shift—20 men—left the Main Gate. By 12:01, the time set, the plants were closed.

So, in the cold midnight of winter, the greatest strike in its history came to the U.S. In a hundred towns strung across the country some 750,000 steelworkers joined auto, electrical, telegraph and meat-packing employees in an organized campaign for higher wages. But of all these strikes steel was by far the biggest and most important, affecting the whole industrial system of the nation (see p. 22). If it lasted any length of time it would put 10,000,000 men and women out of work.

IDLE AND ALMOST EMPTY, the McKeesport plant of the National Tube Co., subsidiary of U.S. Steel Corp., looked like this from across the Monongahela River two days after the strike began. No smoke came from the big chimneys. Before the strike the plant made welded and seamless pipes, some as fine and delicate as hypodermic needles.

QUIET RAILROAD SIDINGS tell the story of U.S. Steel's strike-bound rolling mill at Homestead, Pa. This huge plant makes steel plates for railroad cars, refrigerators.

It has sufficient capacity to produce enough steel for 300 autos every day. If the strike lasts six months, it will require two months to get it in shape for capacity production.

NEW-FALLEN SNOW lies fresh and almost untrampled outside U.S. Steel's open-hearth shop in Homestead, Pa. Union and management cooperated in shutting down the furnaces. The cooling was done slowly and carefully so that none of the brick walls was cracked. When fires are again built up superintendent says some crackage is inevitable.

BEFORE AND AFTER THE STRIKE. At the left John and Frank Casper, father and son, are shown in the open-hearth pumphouse of the Homestead plant where Frank works. As strike gets under way Frank, president of U.S.A. Local 1397, is shown at right reporting preparations at a district meeting of union leaders. His father, John, was born in Czechoslovakia, has six sons, two daughters. Five sons and one daughter have worked in the mill.

after the start of the strike. He is an active member of Local 1397, an assistant head of the grievance committee. He gets paid at tonnage rate and also on the kind of steel he happens to be making. Average: about $50 a week.

STEELMAKER JAMES MADISON, first helper on Open Hearth 75 in the Homestead mill, is shown (left) in the plant before the strike and at home (right), where he intends to stay as long as the strike lasts. He does not want to do picket duty, figures there may eventually be trouble and wants to avoid it. His father, now dead, was a steelworker. He himself came to Homestead in 1912. He did not walk out during 1919 strike. Pay: $49 a week.

STEEL WORKERS

They are tough and their union is the best organized in C.I.O.

Steelworkers are tough, stolid, hard-drinking, hard-working descendants of many races especially of the Poles, Czechs and Scots who came over in the last great waves of immigration. Many of their fathers were steelworkers before them and their grandfathers before that. In the twisted, dirty towns of the Monongahela in the heart of industrial America, there has grown up a steelworkers' way of life, hard, grim, but marked with a pride in their skills and a feeling of importance in the immensity of their operation.

Until the coming of the C.I.O. the steelworkers were mostly unorganized. There had been brief flare-ups of union activity, climaxed by strikes, but the companies had always been successful in breaking up the workers' organizations. In 1892, when the 12-hour-day, seven-day week was the standard practice, the workers struck in the bloody Homestead riots (opposite page). In 1919 in the flush of profits after World War I there came another long and bitter strike led by the A.F.L. A great many workers, remembering the 1892 failure, did not go out and the union was broken. But it was John L. Lewis and Philip Murray in 1935-36 who really organized steel for the first time. Their Steelworkers Organizing Committee, now United Steelworkers of America, came of age in the strike against Little Steel (Republic, Bethlehem, six other small companies) in 1937 and in the famous contract signed with U.S. Steel the same year.

Today the steelworkers are the best-organized and most powerful union in the effective C.I.O. Their president, Phil Murray, having split with Lewis, is president of the C.I.O. Yet in spite of their strength the odds in a drawn-out battle with industry are against the union. To win the strike, they require the active support of government. Truman last week was insisting that Benjamin Fairless, president of U.S. Steel, should settle the strike on the basis of the government's proposal of an 18½¢ raise. But what Truman would do to force this settlement was still uncertain. Fairless' position remained the same as before: Big Steel's proposal of 15¢ was the largest raise ever offered in the steel industry and the most the industry, particularly the small companies, could afford. In addition statisticians figured it will take a worker 50 months to make up the financial loss of a one-month strike. To these arguments Phil Murray was deaf. Instead he asked Secretary of the Treasury Vinson to revise the tax laws under which he claimed U.S. Steel could remain closed during all of 1946 and still, because of rebates, have profits of $149,000,000.

Phil Murray himself watched not only the steel strike but the wave of other C.I.O. strikes. Automobile, electrical and telegraph unions were still out. But in other industries first signs of a break in the deadlocks appeared. In Detroit the U.A.W. settled with Ford and Chrysler without a strike, which in the highly competitive auto industry might force General Motors to terms. In the meat-packing industry, over which the U.S. flag was raised when the government took over the plants, the C.I.O. agreed to go back to work. As a climax to a hectic week, Murray read the news reports from sunny Miami that John L. Lewis had returned with his Mine Workers to the fold of the A.F.L. Murray might have to fight not only industry's managements but also a strengthened and more belligerent A.F.L.

BLOODY HOMESTEAD STRIKE of 1892, first great steel strike, is recalled by George Ackerman, 81, one of the original strikers, as he reads the monument to his old friends who lost their lives. Members of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers had seized Carnegie Steel's Homestead plant. Squads of Pinkerton agents were rushed by barge to break the strike. Landing in the early morning mist, they were greeted by rifle and cannon fire, took cover and opened retaliatory fire. Three detectives and seven workers were killed and 60 men wounded. The Pinkertons were repulsed and the strikers ruled Homestead for six days until National Guardsmen drove them out.

HOW PRODUCTION WILL BE CRIPPLED by a long steel strike is indicated in this chart which shows how industry uses steel. Figures employed are for 1940 because that was last year before war production became of paramount importance. The uses of 1946 steel production will be much the same as 1940 except for larger percentages to railroad and aircraft industries and a smaller for export. Total shipments of finished products made by steel industry were about 57,000,000 tons in 1945.

PARALYSIS AHEAD

Extended steel strike will bring shutdown of 40% of U.S. industry

Not only the U. S. but the world is dependent upon the nation's output of steel. With last week's production at only 5% of capacity, lowest since 1893, more than 40% of the country's factory workers were in industries approaching paralysis. Soon production of homes, autos, pots, pans, refrigerators, railroad cars and locomotives was expected to come to a stop. The secondary effects might be serious, too. Ford announced prospective layoffs of 15,000 to 40,000 workers as lack of parts reduced auto production. In Pennsylvania 10,000 coal miners were out of work as unloaded railroad cars were immobilized in steel-mill yards. In Pittsburgh 4,000 railroad men were furloughed and there were other railroad shutdowns in Chicago, Memphis and Vicksburg. In New York milk deliveries were cut because of a shortage of paper containers made by an American Can Co. plant, which was struck by its U.S.A. members.

STOPPED BY THE STRIKE, ROLLING TABLES INSIDE
U.S. STEEL PLANT AT HOMESTEAD LIE EMPTY AND QUIET

MR. FAIRLESS SHOULD PAY 18½ CENTS

RIGHT OR WRONG, THE PRESIDENT PICKED IT, AND WE'VE GOT TO GET ON WITH THE JOB

Benjamin F. Fairless and his directors should immediately settle the steel strike by acceding to President Truman's proposal for an 18½¢-an-hour increase. We hope they will already have done so by the time this is published.

The last thing that the U. S. or the world can stand at this point is a continued interruption in U. S. steel production. Steel is the kingpin of the whole industrial omnibus, as made clear on page 22. All-out production depends on it, and all-out production is needed to absorb pent-up purchasing power now exceeding $200 billion and burning holes in American pockets. The barbarities that inflation can inflict on a nation are second only to the pains of the battlefield. Beyond our American need, the world is also clamoring for American production. Who else can supply farm implements for a hungry world? Where else can the chilled arteries of French transportation get the 36,000 railway cars now on order here? Says Wayne C. Taylor, president of the Export-Import Bank, "American production is the most important single factor in the peace and well-being of the world today."

There is no difference of opinion about this urgent need for U. S. production. The difference of opinion centers wholly around who should make the concessions that will get it started. We think Mr. Fairless should, for the following reasons.

Mr. Fairless Has a Case . . .

Mr. Fairless is not wholly wrong. He has a case, although you might not think so from reading the ads or listening to the speeches. The case can be found in the testimony of William H. Davis, former chairman of the War Labor Board, before a Senate committee two weeks ago. Although he was not testifying on their side, Mr. Davis supplied obdurate managements with a better argument than any Mr. Fairless used.

"I can assure you, senators," said Mr. Davis, "that any governmental agency imposed upon the parties as an element of an established procedure will destroy the creative values of collective bargaining." The right to strike or to close a plant, he went on, are "fundamental human rights" and only their free exercise can "fix the boundaries of stubbornness" in collective bargaining. When it is known that the government will intervene to stop a strike, it is a "cushioned" strike; the bargaining is unreal and proves nothing. In the G.M. case, Mr. Davis would not have intervened at all. He would have let them have their strike. "They will learn something about it. That is what strikes are for." The return to true collective bargaining and industrial self-government, said Mr. Davis, "is far more important than any crisis that seems to confront us."

Echoing this, Mr. Fairless might go on to say that presidential intervention has set a precedent which will "cushion" every strike from now on, large or small; that if collective bargaining is not quickly resumed, we will find ourselves in a corporative state. He might say with Senator Taft, "I do not see how we can make one rule for the next two months and then say that it will be different after that." He might prove that management must take a stand against government wage-setting and that it must take it now.

. . . But It's Not Good Enough

Along these lines there is a case for Mr. Fairless and other stubborn industrialists. But it is not good enough. And for one basic reason, namely, that for all practical purposes the war is not over.

Inflation is part of the war. Mr. Fairless is worried about inflation and proposes a committee of businessmen to consult with the President about it. But the national problem of inflation is not exclusively a businessman's concern. The maintenance of a sound currency is the responsibility of the federal government. It has been so since the Constitution was adopted and Alexander Hamilton went to work. Today, it is President Truman's duty (by precedent and by explicit emergency powers) to assess the dangers of inflation, the need for production and the price the economy can pay for it. No businessman was chosen for this job. Having once picked steel as the critical case for the whole economy, and having also (however haphazardly) picked the figure at which he wants the general wage pattern set, Mr. Truman should be accorded the honor of the last word.

If the strike continues, Truman is left with no alternative but government seizure. That is a bad alternative. For if token seizure doesn't restore production—and it may not—the occupation, so to speak, must become total. We are thus brought to the brink of the very statism which industry and everybody else wishes to avoid. The 3½¢ that is apparently the fare for the steel industry will certainly prove the highest price we have ever paid for a one-way ticket to hell.

Mr. Fairless pleads that his industry can afford 15¢ more an hour, but not 18½¢. That smells fishy. It's remarkable industry that can figure that close. Too many imponderables enter in. Not least among them is how hard labor will work.

Labor Must Work Hard

Clearly, if the need for production is an overriding obligation on employers, it is equally demanding on workers. Featherbedding, made work, "Petrilloism," slowdowns, are bad at any time but are intolerable in the urgencies of 1946. The low flame on the welding torch, the union limitations on technical improvements, the hidden pressures on workers to produce only 11 units of steel parts in a day when they might without sweat produce 16—all these miserable practices must go out the window. It is also time to end the present uncertainties about union responsibility. Contracts are not one-way streets. We must have order and stability for the same reasons of international necessity that were paramount during the war. We must have them for the further necessity of building a postwar economy on honest measures of work.

When labor is charged with dragging its feet, it usually retorts that it has not enjoyed a "just share" of the increase in productivity. Its leaders are thinking of 1929 and the subsequent depression. They are projecting their thoughts, conditioned by those dreary memories, ahead a few years to the time when goods on the shelf may once again be more abundant than money in the consumer's pocket. To this generation of labor leaders, men like Walter Reuther, the present unprecedented demand for labor's services looks like a once-in-a-lifetime chance to redress our faulty distribution system for keeps. So they come with an array of demands that leaves management feeling about as bewildered as the owner of a New York Lower East Side apartment house a few years back. He found his tenants, mostly communists, picketing the building with placards: "We want lower rent," "We want better elevator service," "We want more heat," "Free the Scottsboro Boys." The owner observed the signs for a few moments, sighed wearily and said, "I can give you more heat, better elevator service, and lower rents; but I'll be damned if I can do anything about the Scottsboro Boys!"

Back to the Job

In having long-range social objectives, labor of course is well within its rights. But the basic changes and improvements our economic machinery needs will require wide, considered public support and positive congressional action. Labor, by precipitating a crisis at this juncture, has sacrificed some public support and dangerously alienated Congress. Full or high-level employment, annual wages, minimum wages, better social security, profit-sharing schemes and so on are parts of the puzzle that must be fitted together if the economy is to be balanced and secure. This is thoughtful, even delicate, work. It should not be attempted in the present atmosphere, which is that of a cage full of monkeys at mealtime.

Labor, through its more seasoned leaders like Philip Murray, has put a price tag on its present willingness to get back on the job, referring its long term objectives to more orderly channels. In the case of steel, the President of the U.S. has set the price: 18½¢ more an hour. We must have the steel. So let us accept the facts of life, pay the price and be on with the job.

PICTURE OF THE WEEK: ➔

General of the Army Dwight D. Eisenhower last week met one of the most formidable opponents of his career and almost went down to defeat. On his way to Congress to testify on the draft he was hit by a flank attack of wives who wanted their husbands home. The general beat a strategic retreat into Representative Andrew May's office, but the women broke through, drove him into a corner. Tight-faced, the general explained patiently that there was little he could do to help. Later he admitted the engagement left him "emotionally upset."

FILIBUSTER AGAINST FEPC

Southern Democrats talk the Senate out of business

From Jan. 17 to last weekend, except on the day of the President's budget message, the highest law-making body in the U. S., confronted by grave national issues, listened instead to boyhood anecdote, readings from the Bible, corrections of Senate Journal punctuation, a discussion of carpetbaggers in South Carolina history, charges that the galleries were filled with Communists, a eulogy of Historian Thomas B. Macaulay and other irrelevancies. A Senate filibuster was on against the proposed Fair Employment Practice Commission.

HANDFUL OF SENATORS, LESS THAN QUORUM, ARE ON HAND. BORED PRESS GALLERY (EXTREME RIGHT) SCRIBBLES. NEAR PRESIDING OFFICER'S DAIS, PAGES LOUNGE

Filibustering is possible in the Senate because its rules establish that once a member has gained the floor it is his for as long as he talks. By yielding only to members of like views, a small group can suspend all Senate business for as long as it can talk in relay. The filibustering record is 46 days, set during debate on repealing a silver-purchase law in 1893.

Now the target was a proposal for a permanent Fair Employment Practice Commission that would make illegal racial or religious discrimination in employment. Southern senators object because it would give Negroes equality with whites and began filibustering the instant it was introduced. As they went on, the seldom photographable Senate Chamber was sketched by Artist B. F. Dolbin. "A travesty upon democratic processes," snapped New Mexico's Chavez of the filibuster. FEPC proponents moved to invoke the infrequently applied closure rule limiting each senator to a one-hour speech. But at week's end, possibly because filibusters are usually successful, some also talked of compromise.

TRUCE IN CHINA

Marshall's mediation persuades leaders to halt civil warfare

The wise, gray soldier from America had by last week led China one difficult step nearer peace. General George C. Marshall, retired chief of staff of the U.S. Army, had persuaded China's warring factions to sign a military truce.

When Marshall arrived in China on Dec. 20, Chinese Communists and Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek's armies were engaged in bitter civil warfare. After four days of conferences with Communist General Chou En-lai and Chiang's General Chang Chun, he emerged with what he wanted: an agreement to cease firing and preserve the approximate status quo until China's future had been talked out. Since then the newly summoned Political Consultation Conference, in which all political parties are represented, has made some progress in blueprinting a new government but has not solved the ticklish problems of how much power Chiang's Kuomintang should have and how a single, unified army of both Communist and non-Communist forces should be formed.

MAN REACHES MOON WITH RADAR

Signal Corps makes first contact with satellite, 238,000 miles away

Jan. 10, 1946 is the date of man's first successful signal to outer space. At Belmar, N. J. a little group of Army Signal Corps technicians flashed a powerful radar impulse at the moon. Traveling the 238,000 miles between the earth and its satellite with the speed of light, the tiny echo of the impulse came back to New Jersey in 2.4 seconds. The echo was detected and translated on a radar receiving circuit as an audible peep and a jagged peak on the face of a cathode-ray tube (see left).

The Signal Corps experiment was only the beginning of a new scientific adventure. The technique used by the Belmar experimenters could already be used to detect enemy rockets which might travel above the atmosphere. It can also be used to study the ionosphere, the little-known layer of electrically charged gas atoms in the upper air. Someday, presuming that transmitters and receivers are greatly refined, it might even be used to map the topography of the moon and the planets.

$60,000 WARDROBE

Film magnates spend small fortune dressing Rita Hayworth for movie

The spendthrift mood of the U. S. was capped last week in Hollywood where movie magnates, never too tight with a dollar, were throwing money around with abandon remarkable even for them. A climax came with the news that Rita Hayworth's wardrobe for her new picture, Gilda, would cost Columbia Pictures Corporation $60,000.

For its money Columbia was getting a $35,000 chinchilla coat and a $10,000 ermine wrap. Miss Hayworth never wears the wrap but simply drags it around on the floor after her. In addition Designer Jean Louis delivered ten dresses, three negligees, a masquerade costume and a pair of pajamas. In the clothes Miss Hayworth, whose beauty is a national asset on the order of Grand Canyon or TVA, looked so lovely that no one was rude enough to ask if the effect could not have been achieved for less than the final total of $59,416.39. The odd $1.39 went for a pair of stockings, which were marked down because there was a hole in them.

Catherine de Medici said "Mmmmm!"

Catherine, it seems, was not quite so heartless a hostess as she was cracked up to be. She did serve an occasional cup of nice, hot poison. But most of her dinner guests fared very well indeed, for she fed them heaping dishes of a new delicacy—ice cream!

As brides will, Catherine brought favorite family recipes from Florence to her husband's court. One of them was for ice cream. And the novelty-loving French, unused to such a rare delight, promptly lapped it up!

That was over four centuries ago. Yet ice cream remained a nobleman's luxury for many long years. Only in fairly modern times could its unique appeal be enjoyed by everybody—at every-day meals.

And it's only in modern times, too, that ice cream is recognized in its true light—not as a luxury, but as a valuable food. Like milk, butter and cheese, it furnishes both vitamins and calcium in generous amounts, and is a fine energy source as well. Good reasons why you find it so frequently starred by nutrition experts!

Today, again, you can satisfy war-suppressed appetites for all the ice cream you want, as often as you want it. We're glad to be able to restore it on your menus. And we'll continue to make ice cream of finest quality—striving always, through research, to offer you the greatest possible benefits from milk, "nature's most nearly perfect food."

ASA FOUND HE WAS GOING IN A CIRCLE

THE ZEBRA DERBY

Slap-happy veteran gets run-around trying to find his postwar place

by MAX SHULMAN

Max Shulman is a 26-year-old ex-Army Air Forces sergeant whose screwball wit, in Barefoot Boy with Cheek (1943) and The Feather Merchants (1944), made him one of the top U.S. humorists. This is an excerpt from Shulman's latest zany fiction, The Zebra Derby (Doubleday & Company, Inc.; $2). It tells how one Asa Hearthrug, discharged from the Army, strives manfully to take his place in the postwar world.

I decided that I would no longer strike out by myself in my efforts to find my postwar position. There was no need for a man to try it alone. After all, there were various government agencies which had been established to aid returned servicemen.

So I went to the Veterans' Administration, where I was sent to the U. S. Employment Service, where I was sent to the Selective Service Board, where I was sent to the Veterans' Placement Service Board, where I was sent to the Retraining and Re-employment Administration of the Office of War Mobilization, where I was sent to the Veterans' Service Committee, where I was sent to the Veterans' Administration, where I was sent to the U. S. Employment Service, where I suddenly had a feeling that I was traveling in a circle.

I thought perhaps my confusion could be cleared up if I went to some of the veterans' organizations for information. So I went to the Society of American Veterans, where they sold me a membership and a green uniform with yellow piping on the pants. Then I went to the Council of Ex-Servicemen, where they sold me a membership and a pink uniform with white piping on the pants. At the American Veterans' Congress they sold me a membership and red uniform with green piping on the pants. At the Ex-Servicemen's League they sold me a membership and a Zouave uniform with no piping on the pants, and at the American Veterans' Mobilization they sold me a membership and a long fuchsia tunic, no pants.

I put on all my uniforms and walked colorfully down the street. Turning a corner, I saw a long line of men attired as I was. They stood in front of a building, motley and multihued, their eccentric striping garish in the afternoon sun.

"Looks like a zebra derby," said a policeman standing beside me. . . .

But I wasn't listening. I walked over to the end of the line to question one of the men, but before I could ask him anything he said, "That's right, Mac. We all been through the mill too. But maybe we'll get somewhere now. This is a new place, the Co-ordinator of Veterans' Affairs. Get in line."

I got in line with my fellow veterans. . . . The line moved slowly forward. . . . I entered the Co-ordinator's private office.

"How do you do?" he said, rising. "My name is Rodney Uinctious and I'm here to help you. We owe you boys a great debt—a great debt. Just tell me what you want and I'll see that you get it."

I brushed aside a tear.

"Would you like to start a small business?" asked Rodney Uinctious.

"I don't want to start a small business, please, sir," I said. "I hate small businesses."

"Then it's a job you want," he said, his face falling. . . .

"I want," I cried, "to fill my place in the new civilization, to secure my niche in the millennium, to take up my torch in the bright parade of humanity toward the Utopia that is at hand."

"Oh," he said unhappily. "I don't suppose you've had any college?"

"A year at the University of Minnesota," I said modestly.

He slapped the desk. "Young man," he exclaimed, "it's back to college for you! And not a penny will it cost you. No sir. You'll have tuition paid and $65 a month to live as hilariously as you like. We haven't forgotten our obligation to our dear veterans. No sir. What do you say, son? Will you go back to college?"

I nodded wordlessly, not trusting myself to speak.

The University of Minnesota!

How fine it was to set foot again on the campus of my alma mater!

Hat in hand, I entered the office of Max Ivycovered, one of the staff of veterans' program advisers. I was at once impressed with Mr. Ivycovered, for he was an impressive figure with his suit of tweeds so luxuriant that there was a covey of grouse in the back pleats, his fluorescent Phi Beta Kappa key, his double-boiler pipe, his English woolen socks with clocks that actually ticked.

"How do you do?" I said. "I'm Asa Hearthrug and I've come for advice."

Mr. Ivycovered sighed. "Well," he said, "I suppose we might as well get right to work on this nasty problem."

"Problem?" I asked.

"A nasty problem," he repeated. "Nasty. How do they expect us to fit you people back into college life? You come back from the battlefields brutalized, narrow-eyed killers. You're restless. You're lawless. You crave violence. You're impatient with the cloistered atmosphere of academic life."

"To the contrary, sir," I replied, "I want nothing more than to----"

"Shut up when I'm talking," he said kindly. "The ways of civilization are repugnant to you. The tranquility of books is an anathema. Ideas bore you; theories make you chafe. What can be done with you people?"

"But, Mr. Ivycovered," I said, "that's not true. College life is exactly what I----"

"Don't be silly, Hearthrug. You don't know what you're talking about. You listen to me. . . ."

"Oh," I said. "Well, what is to be done with me, Mr. Ivycovered?"

Mr. Ivycovered shrugged. "We've got to let you go to school, Hearthrug. It's your right, even if you have been turned into a ravening beast, a bloodthirsty engine of destruction."

I snarled and kicked over a lamp.

"How can we expect to interest you in the liberal arts?" said Mr. Ivycovered. "How can the humanities and social sciences claim your attention? For you have been schooled in mayhem and uproar, in ferocity and tumult, in outrage and infraction."

I upset a settee and clawed plaster from the walls.

Hearthrug becomes a ravening beast

"Alas," said Mr. Ivycovered, "and alack. That the university has come to this. Well, we must make out a program for you. How about some courses in English literature?"

"Pap," I shrieked, demolishing a wastebasket.

"Some sociology or economics, perhaps?"

"Milk and water," I roared, and hurled a bust of Pallas Athene through the casement upon an old lady walking below.

"History and anthropology? Psychology?"

"Kid stuff," I bellowed, twisting a metal filing cabinet with my bare hands.

Mr. Ivycovered threw up his hands. "You see," he cried. "I was right. You have been brutalized. You are a ravening beast. I can do nothing for you. Perhaps one of the other veterans' advisers can help you. Go into the next office and see Miss Berisha-Faertz."

Ignoring the door, I kicked a hole in the wall and lunged into Miss Berisha-Faertz's office.

Hearthrug becomes a complex problem

I crouched before Miss Berisha-Faertz's desk and coiled to spring at her bodice.

"Stop!" she cried, whipping a revolver out of her tunic. "You must have been talking to Mr. Ivycovered. This always happens. Listen, young man, you're not a killer."

"Oh, happy day," I said, much relieved.

Miss Berisha-Faertz put the revolver back in her tunic. "I'm sorry I had to pull a gun on you," she said. "It's just that they're always so violent after talking to Mr. Ivycovered."

"Honest, lady," I said, "I'm not a complex problem. I'm no kind of problem. All I want is to go back to school."

"Nonsense," she replied. "Don't try to tell me. I've had three semesters of psychology."

"Oh," I said, impressed.

Miss Berisha-Faertz took off her trifocals and leaned forward friendlily. "Young man," she said, "I'm going to rehabilitate you."

"Thank you! Thank you!" I cried hoarsely.

"First of all," she said, "we must establish rapport, as they say in Psychology Two. I want you to know that I am your friend and I am going to do my best to help you."

I climbed up in her lap and laid my head on her bosom, shifting it later to her collarbone, which was softer.

"In order to rehabilitate you," said Miss Berisha-Faertz, "we must delve into your personality. We must probe patiently until we find all the scars that the Army has left upon your subconscious. We must heal those scars, and then we must prescribe a treatment that will make you a useful citizen again. With my vast knowledge of psychology and your cooperation, we shall succeed. You shall take your place in society once more."

I planted a soft kiss on her collarbone.

"First," said Miss Berisha-Faertz, "let us analyze what the Army has done to you. You must understand, young man, that for the past few years you have been alienated from the world. You have been living in a world of your own—an army world, a world of peril, strife, and sudden death.”

“You said it,” I said. “I remember one night on Okinawa. . . .”

“Don’t try to talk about it, dear schizoid,” said Miss Berisha-Faertz. “As I was saying, you’ve been living in a world of your own. All your thoughts, all your actions, have been conditioned by the Army. The mores of your civilian life have been stripped away; your set of values has been altered. Take your speech, for instance. You have become so used to profanity that it is now second nature with you.”

“Fudge,” I said. “Land o’Goshen, heck, tarnation, crim-a-nent-lies.”

“Not only profanity has crept into your speech,” she said, “but also the peculiar jargon of the Army.”

“Snafu,” I said, “tarfu, fubar, and weft.”

“And,” continued Miss Berisha-Faertz, “Mr. Ivycovered was partly right. It is true that you have been made into a killer. You have been taught cruelty.”

I pulled the wings off a fly.

“But at the same time,” she said, “you have learned to protect and rescue your comrades, to minister to the wounded. You have been taught compassion.”

I put the wings back on the fly.

Miss Berisha-Faertz went on. “You’ve learned fear.”

I trembled.

“You’ve experienced boredom.”

I yawned.

“You’ve known hunger.”

I bit her collarbone.

“Oh my,” said Miss Berisha-Faertz, rubbing her hands, “what a fine complex problem you are. Oh my!”

“Maybe,” I suggested, “everything would work out all right if you just let me go to classes like everybody else.”

“We’ll try everything,” said Miss Berisha-Faertz, her good eye aglow. “I’ll make you whole again, have no fear. We’ll try handicraft and community singing and finger painting and tepid baths and maze running. Oh my!”

I slid off her lap.

“Perhaps,” mused Miss Berisha-Faertz, “insulin injections are indicated. Yes, I believe they are. This is a very difficult case. Then there’s that technique that Oft-Krabbing developed at Purdue. I think we’ll have a go at that too. And Sang-Freud over at Vanderbilt has worked wonders with his 30-day Ferris-wheel ride. It wouldn’t hurt to—Where are you going, young man?”

“Back home to Whistlestop, lady,” I said. “I know when I’m licked.”

DR. LEY'S BRAIN

Study by Army doctors shows Nazi suicide was medically degenerate

While the big Nazis were in power, medical men often wondered if some of them might not be genuine mental cases. The first real chance to investigate this possibility came last October, when Dr. Robert Ley, bibulous boss of the German Labor Front, strangled himself with a towel in his prison cell at Nürnberg. Immediately after Ley's death his brain was removed and preserved in formaldehyde. Later it was sent to the U. S. for examination. At the Army Institute of Pathology in Washington, Major Webb Haymaker dissected the brain, verified what Army doctors had believed when Ley was alive. Ley's brain was definitely abnormal. The frontal lobes, which largely control emotion and thinking, were slightly atrophied and their covering membranes thickened. The cells of the cortex showed a long-standing degeneration from unknown causes. These conditions, said Major Haymaker, were enough "to have impaired [Ley's] mental and emotional faculties."

TOURIST FLORIDA

IT IS WARM, SUNNY AND SWOLLEN WITH MONEY

Onto the sunny peninsula of Florida, where temperatures last week ranged to 83° (Chicago 6°, Duluth -15°, New York 24°, Milwaukee 1°), tourists poured in a dollar-swollen, postwar torrent. Money seemed as plentiful as the sand on the sunny beaches. Earl Wilson, the New York Post columnist, wrote of neckties selling for $1,500 and oranges at 19¢ each, of free spenders tossing as much as $1,500 to $2,500 a night into the cash registers of bars. The state's most distinguished winter visitor, Winston Churchill, did his bit for the pleased chambers of commerce by declaring enthusiastically, "The greatest pleasure I have is greeting the genial sunshine of Miami Beach."

On the following pages LIFE presents a portfolio of Florida tourist sights, big and little, magnificent and tawdry. On pages 52 and 53 is a map by Miguel Covarrubias vividly illustrating some of the things a tourist can do and see. They run all the way from gambling at the races to watching a young Indian (above) wrestle with alligators.

SEA AND BEACH (above) girdle Florida's 1,145 miles of coastline. The water, even when stormy, is a bright blue-green. The spray is foamy white and the sand soft and warm. This picture shows a battered fishing pier north of Miami Beach.

SWAMPS AND BROKEN PINE (below) and forests of cypress monopolize Florida's 58,666 square miles of interior, except where land has been artificially built up. This desolate country lies alongside the Overseas Highway on the way to Key West.

SHOWY HOMES like this one on Collins Avenue have made Miami Beach a laboratory for rich architects, good and bad. This Spanish-style house faces the beach. The grounds are a formal garden of coconut palms, clipped Australian pines and a shimmering pool fragrant with pond lilies.

$165,000 HOUSE (above) was designed in the '20s by Carl Fisher, Miami Beach pioneer promoter. It is owned by Maxwell Lehrman, retired detective, who got it for $35,000. Below: the home of John Shepard Jr. in Palm Beach, designed by Addison Mizner, prizefighter, miner, artist.

WATER SKIING has long publicized Cypress Gardens, near Winter Haven—a tropical wonderland of exotic flowers, plants, trees and girls. Here "Tee" Matthews uses new, short skis behind a racing motorboat.

FOOLISH STUNTS like posing Roberta Van Buskirk on a stuffed tiger at Daytona Beach have brought curious and impulsive visitors to Florida, helped jingle cash registers in 1,328 hotels and boarding houses. Taking pictures on tiger costs 15¢.

THE OLDEST CABBIE in St. Augustine, oldest town in the U. S., waits for passengers outside Fort Marion. In fringed-topped surreys the old cabbies take tourists to the oldest house, old schoolhouse, old Spanish cemetery and Fountain of Youth.

WORTH AVENUE, Palm Beach's fabulous shopping center, is lined by branches of Fifth Avenue stores. Palm Beach is the most exclusive, expensive and among the quietest of Florida's big resorts. Dues in the Bath Club once were $10,000 a year.

PALM BEACH STREETS are closely lined with Australian pines (above) and sometimes with royal palms. Before careful planting, even the Palm Beach countryside looked like a dismal swamp. The town now keeps trees pruned and beaches groomed.

CIRCUS BANDWAGON, called the "Five Graces," is parked in the winter quarters of the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus in Sarasota. Here tourists can watch the wild animals and performers practicing new acts for the summer season.

RICKETY DOCKS at Key West serve the prosperous fishing industry operating out through the Keys and the Gulf of Mexico. More than 500 varieties of fish are caught off Florida. The shack in the right foreground here is a turtle slaughterhouse.

This road map, painted especially for LIFE by Miguel Covarrubias, takes the tourist along the main highways through the garish and exciting wonderland of the state of Florida.

Close study will reveal many of Florida's sports, industries, history and tourist attractions: the ghost of Ponce de León drinking water from the Fountain of Youth; the pirate flag flying over Pirate's Cove on the Keys; the strange fish of Marineland; the racing automobiles at Daytona Beach; the snake milked of its venom for serum; the swamps and trees of the Everglades; the alligators; the hunting; the circus winter quarters at Sarasota; the Seminole Indians; the fishing and swimming; the cigar, sponge, citrus-fruit, turpentine, watermelon and strawberry industries. There are 105 Florida items, places and products on the map.

UNDERWATER SWIMMING in Silver Springs can be photographed through a boat's underwater portholes. Here Ellen Daniell, 17-year-old Ocala High School senior, performs for the camera. Once she caught a fish by the tail. The water in Silver Springs is crystal clear, apparently because it is filtered by white sand and limestone.

GERMS DISAPPEAR in laboratory test under attack of streptomycin. Smears of six germs are put on culture plates. When no streptomycin is present (1), all germs grow. When a tiny dose of streptomycin is put on plate (2), tuberculosis germs die.

When dosage is doubled, Klebs pneumonia dies (3). Redoubled dose kills tularemia (4) and, redoubled again, typhoid and urinary infection (5). Staphylococcus, a common cause of infection, survives a heavy dose (6). Fortunately it is susceptible to penicillin.

STREPTOMYCIN

New drug can kill many germs which are immune to penicillin

Streptomycin is a new drug which is very much like penicillin but which cures diseases penicillin cannot. It is the first drug found which can cure deadly tularemia (rabbit fever) and certain very dangerous and highly resistant urinary infections. It has been used successfully on cases of influenzal meningitis, typhoid fever, bacillary dysentery and wound infection. Streptomycin's greatest hope, however, has not yet been realized. It kills the germs of tuberculosis easily in the laboratory (above) but is not consistently effective in the body.

Streptomycin, discovered by Dr. Selman A. Waksman of Rutgers University in 1944, is produced by Streptomyces griseus, a microscopic organism which is similar to penicillin's Penicillium chrysogenum. Streptomyces normally grows in the soil and has the pungent odor of freshly plowed fields. At Merck & Co.'s laboratory where small amounts of streptomycin are now being produced (see following pages), it is grown in huge cultures.

"STREPTOMYCES GRISEUS," which secretes streptomycin, is tiny organism related to molds and found in manured soil. Here its strands are magnified 600 times.

PENICILLIUM CHRYSOGENUM, a mold commonly found on bread or cheese, secretes penicillin. Its strands resemble Streptomyces griseus but are a good deal larger.

STREPTOMYCIN PRODUCTION starts with the introduction of a pinhead quantity of the streptomycin organisms into small bottles containing nutrient. Four-days' incubation at 77° F. produces heavy mats of Streptomyces griseus (above). Enough organisms are now in each of the bottles to inoculate ten culture flasks (below, left).

VIOLENT SHAKING of flasks on tables which move back and forth and around aerates the solution and helps organisms to grow. Shaking continues for three days.

IN BIG TANKS the contents of the flasks are added to nutrient and are stirred rapidly. Organisms multiply and give off the streptomycin secretion in quantity.

IN HIGH-VACUUM APPARATUS streptomycin which has been filtered and purified from broth in big tanks (p. 58) is frozen and dried. Final step is to powder drug. These photographs were taken at Merck plant in Rahway, N. J.

NEW STREPTOMYCIN (in test tubes) is tested against a standard solution by putting tiny glass cylinders in a culture dish, filling some with new and some with standard drug. Cylinders rest on bed of nutrient mixed with germs.

GERMS CANNOT GROW where streptomycin has seeped out from the glass cylinders into nutrient. The three large, dark areas were sterilized by new, over-strength solution, the three smaller areas by standard streptomycin.

"THE KID" COMES BACK

Bald, broke and 31, Coogan revives 1920 role

In 1920, 5-year-old Jackie Coogan stirred American movie fans to loud sobs and louder laughter as he and Charlie Chaplin stumbled through the misadventures of two poor pariahs in The Kid. The most successful child star of his time, Jackie left Chaplin, went on to earn a fortune of $4,000,000. He married Betty Grable, lost his fortune, then his bride. Married again, divorced again, he went to war, served in Burma. Now, balding at 31, he is reduced to burlesquing his great role of "The Kid" at Slapsy Maxie's nightclub in Hollywood. Jackie's skit is a success even though it jars sentimental memories of millions of Americans.

IN ORIGINAL FILM Chaplin and Coogan were a wistful pair. Chaplin was a tramp glazier who befriended a deserted waif, then tried to elude police.

Romantic Rio

Every day was as glorious as this!

1. (above) "Tom and I arrived in Rio just as daylight was breaking—right on time. After breakfast (and oh! what good coffee they serve in Brazil!) we drove up to Vista Chinesa and looked out over that wonderful city. There was the peak of Corcovado (left) topped by the statue of Christ . . . And here we were, hundreds of feet above the blue Atlantic with warmth and color everywhere and a swim scheduled for . . ."

2. (right) "11 A. M. at the world-famous beach called Copacabana. The white surf rolled in from the open Atlantic. And the sun was so hot it didn't seem possible that there was snow and ice in Buffalo, New York. We just loved it! But we remembered we had a date for lunch up at Petropolis, so . . ."

3. (left) "We drove through the city and were amazed how modern it is. Sixteen and twenty-four-story office buildings are common. Beautiful apartment houses. Wide, tree-lined boulevards. Flowers everywhere . . . Then we began to climb into the mountains . . ."

4. "We were late for lunch at the Hotel Quitandinha at Petropolis but nobody cared . . . They have time to live in Brazil and what hotels they build! The Quitandinha has everything! Its own swimming pool, own golf course, tennis courts, skating rink, riding stables, casino—yes, even its own theatre!"

5. "After lunch they brought around the horses. I fell in love with the black one because she was so gentle and Tom had a chestnut one with a white star in his forehead. He could go like the wind! . . . Look at those flowers there. They're azaleas and we saw hundreds of others along the bridle paths. The Quitandinha is 2,600 feet above sea level and the air is just like champagne."

6. "At night we danced the samba to that Latin American music that really sends you. The food was simply delicious and the more we saw of the Quitandinha the more amazed we were. You have to see this place to believe it. We'd had a glorious day and we had ten more just like it before we came back, tanned, rested, and Pan American fans for life!"

ROADABLE PLANE

Texas airman prepares to produce a revolutionary flying automobile

The queer-looking flying machine above is a roadable airplane, a plane which can shed its wings and double as an automobile (below). It was invented by an aviation engineer named Ted Hall, who works for Consolidated Vultee, and was built by Willis Brown who, during the war, made parts for Grumman planes and B-24s at his Southern Aircraft plant in Garland, Texas. A conservative man, Mr. Brown has been flying his autoplane for four months, thinks it is now near the production stage.

Other roadable planes have been designed so that the wings were carried along with the plane when it turned into an auto. The Brown plan is to have wing-and-tail units which are detached at airports when a flight is over, leaving the pilot free to drive to his destination. When he comes back to fly again, the wing-tail section is bolted back on. Assembled, the plane weighs 1,860 lb. loaded, 760 lb. more than a Cub. Its price under quantity production might get down to $2,500.

ON THE GROUND, WITH FLYING SURFACES OFF, ROADABLE PLANE IS A STREAMLINED, THREE-WHEEL COUPE, HAS A FOUR-GEAR SHIFT, DRIVES MORE THAN 60 MPH

THE CROWN PRINCE LEADS HIS SISTERS AND PARENTS PAST THE FLOWER-SHADOW PAVILION WHERE HIROHITO OFTEN MEDITATES

Sunday at Hirohito's

Emperor poses for first informal pictures

The pictures on these pages are the first informal photographs ever released of the Japanese imperial family. They include the first pictures showing a smile on the emperor's face, the first of the empress with her chickens, the first of the family at a meal, the first of the emperor reading American comics.

For Japan, the photographs are precedent-shattering and even more startling than the emperor's abandonment of his claim to divinity. Two of these pictures were published in the Tokyo press last month and caused a sensation. The Japanese imperial household had granted permission to LIFE as a "special honor" to use four Sundays in December photographing the members of the imperial family. Since the family is fearful of assassination, American photographers were barred and Japanese photographers of the Sun News Agency used.

The photographs of Sunday at Hirohito's show how great a symbolic comedown the war has forced on Hirohito. The obvious intention of the Japanese in permitting them was to build the emperor as a man understandable to Americans. What happens in the future to Hirohito's status will not be particularly influenced by the facts that he is a model family man, aged 44, neat and nervous, methodical, thrifty, decent, with a strong voice and handshake and fond of his wife (a love choice), children and his mother, who was strongly opposed to the war. He admires Abraham Lincoln (see p. 79), as do many Japanese, who are taught more American history than many Americans. He has read the works of Longfellow and Whittier. His children, who resemble their mother more than him, always come together on Sunday. The two boys live with their grandmother at another palace.

THE FUNNIES in the Stars and Stripes (Blondie and Moon Mullins) are read by emperor to crown prince.

CROWN PRINCE AKIHITO PULLS THE TAIL OF ONE OF HIS MOTHER'S LEGHORNS WHILE HIS FATHER AND THREE OF HIS SISTERS LOOK ON

Imperial family lives in royal bomb shelter

The imperial family posed in almost complete silence for the four Jap photographers assigned to the job for LIFE by the Sun News Agency. Once Hirohito said, "We will be natural, so you be at ease too." All the interiors shown here are in the so-called "temporary palace," which is actually a heavily fortified bomb shelter begun in December 1941, about the time of Pearl Harbor, long before B-29 incendiaries burned out the palace. Roof and ceilings are thick layers of reinforced concrete, plus sandbags and dirt. Basements go down 150 feet. Exits are underground tunnels. Emperor has no plans for rebuilding palace.

SUNDAY LUNCH of soup and fish is begun by (clockwise around table) Prince Masahito, 10, empress, Princess Atsuko, 14, Princess Takako, 6, Crown Prince Akihito, 12, emperor and Princess Kazuko, 16. This is the first picture ever released of the emperor smiling. Notice that Prince Masahito has a pillow on chair so he can reach the table.

AFTER LUNCH the empress sits down at the piano to teach Princess Takako a little Chopin, while the emperor and the crown prince smirk on sofa. She has taught all her children to play piano and billiards. This is in corner of huge living room of temporary palace bomb-shelter. In other corners are a movie screen and a billiard table.

EMPEROR'S ONLY GRANDSON, Nobuhiko, 11 months old, born by candlelight during an air raid around

March 10, comes visiting on Sunday in unpainted buggy. His parents are the emperor's eldest daughter, Shikiko, 20 (behind emperor), and Prince Higashi-Kuni, 29 (right), imperial cousin and the eldest son of a former premier.

Japs show emperor as scholarly family man

The not very subtle purpose of the Jap imperial household is to present Hirohito as a democrat, father, grandfather, citizen and botanist. It censored some photographs of him in uniform, happily revealed a little shabbiness, such as the baby carriage above, had him read a copy of the New York Times and got Abraham Lincoln into the picture (opposite page). The emperor is in fact a qualified working biologist. He himself discovered the two pickled marine fauna shown below and named by him Symphosiphoea Imperialis Terao (the shrimp) and Lyrocteis Imperatoris Komai (the jellyfish).

THE EMPEROR'S PLANTS are watered personally by the emperor on the front terrace of the bomb shelter.

THE EMPEROR'S SHRIMP (center) was discovered by him on beach in 1918, his own jellyfish (right) in 1941.

EMPEROR'S LABORATORY is modern, fully equipped. Near shelter is storehouse for his biological specimens.

BOB HOPE AND BING CROSBY sit fishing through the ice in the middle of the Alaskan wilderness. Crosby catches 14 fish. Hope gets none. After Crosby leaves, a fish rises to surface and asks where Crosby has gone. In addition to the talking fish, Road to Utopia has a bear which plays a whole scene in pantomime, winds up by complaining that a fish gets more lines than he does. The most amusing animal does not talk, however. It is a shaggy dog which trots after Hope with a stick of dynamite in its mouth.

MOVIE OF THE WEEK:

Road to Utopia

Bing Crosby and Bob Hope gag up the Klondike gold rush

Road to Utopia is the fourth "Road" picture for Bing Crosby and Bob Hope. On previous excursions they ended up in Singapore, Zanzibar, Morocco. This time their destination is Alaska during the Klondike gold rush. Crosby and Hope are a vaudeville team who are forced to leave San Francisco. They go to Alaska, get hold of a map of a gold mine, meet Dorothy Lamour (a pure-hearted bar-room singer) and ultimately escape from the villains after two mad chases.

This creaky plot is only a framework on which Hope and Crosby hang their preposterous gags. Like most Crosby-Hope pictures, Road to Utopia is a collection of all the comedy ideas, new and old, which the co-stars and a handful of writers could think up or remember during the two months it took to make the movie. The plot and locale are discarded whenever they get in the way of a laugh. Present-day references are made to Crosby's voice ("Who could be selling fish at this hour?"), to their employers (an Alaskan mountain appears surrounded by stars and the trade mark, "Paramount Pictures"), to current developments (Lamour: "You're facetious." Hope: "Keep politics out of this!") If one gag fails, no harm is done because another one comes along in ten seconds.

GAGS: Hope mistakes a bear for a girl (top) and mutters, "I'll get you real furs. You won't have to wear this cheap imitation." Middle: Lamour wears sarong in snow, kisses Hope so passionately he melts snowdrift. Bottom: Santa Claus rides by at odd moment.

THE VILLAINS, Sperry and McGurk, trap Bing Crosby and Bob Hope in a stateroom on the ship to Alaska. The latter have just found the map to a fabulous gold mine discovered by Dorothy Lamour's father, whom villains murdered back in San Francisco.

THE HEROES outwit Sperry and McGurk, paste beards on and assume the villains' identities (above). Everyone in Skagway kowtows to them. Finally Dorothy Lamour (below), thinking they are father's murderers, vamps Crosby and Hope, trying to get map.

IN THE LAST CHANCE SALOON Crosby and Hope run into more trouble after Sperry and McGurk perish in avalanche started off by a slight hiccough from Hope.

SALOON BLOWS UP after Hope and Crosby escape from it, leaving behind them a lighted stick of dynamite brought by dog. Now they flee from a gang of cutthroats.

CHASE ENDS when Hope and Lamour are separated from Crosby by a sudden crevasse. They have the map and he must face enraged pursuers. Hope and Lamour live happily ever after in luxury thinking Crosby is dead. Finally, aged 70, he shows up with two blondes, discovers that Hope and Lamour's son looks exactly like Crosby.

Second Secret Speech

In a document published here for the first time, the Prime Minister explains to Parliament why the Allies dealt with Vichy's No. 2 man

I WILL DEAL TODAY with certain aspects of the considerable enterprise which we and the United States have launched in French Northwest Africa, to which for convenience some months ago I gave the code name of TORCH.

On August 26, on my return from Moscow [where he conferred with Stalin, Molotov and Averell Harriman, representing President Roosevelt—ED.] I telegraphed as follows to President Roosevelt:

"As I see this operation, it is primarily political in its foundations. The first victory we have to win is to avoid a battle. The second, if we cannot avoid it, to win it. In order to give us the best chances of the first victory we must a) present the maximum appearance of overwhelming strength at the moment of the first attack, and b) attack at as many places as possible. This is an absolutely different kind of operation from the Dieppe business. There we were up against German efficiency and the steelbound, fortified coasts of France. In TORCH we have to face at the worst weak, divided opposition and an enormous choice of striking points at which to land. Risks and difficulties will be doubled by delay and will far outstrip increase of our forces. Careful planning in every detail, safety first in every calculation, farseeing provisions for a long-term campaign to meet every conceivable adverse contingency, however admirable in theory, will ruin the enterprise in fact.

"In order to lighten the burden of responsibility on the military commanders, I am of opinion that you and I should lay down the political data and take the risk upon ourselves. In my view, it would be reasonable to assume a) that Spain will not go to war with Britain and the United States on account of TORCH; b) that it will be at least two months before the Germans can force their way through Spain or procure some accommodation from her; c) that the French resistance in North Africa will be largely token resistance, capable of being overcome by the suddenness and scale of the attack, and that thereafter the North African French may actively help us under their own commanders; d) that Vichy will not declare war on the United States and Great Britain; e) that Hitler will put extreme pressure on Vichy, but that in October he will not have the forces available to overrun unoccupied France while at the same time we keep him pinned in the Pas de Calais, etc."

The last of these forecasts was falsified because the French never made any resistance to the overrunning of the Unoccupied Zone, but all the others have so far been borne out by events. I quote them to show how much politics, apart from strategy, were involved in our joint plan, and how we hoped to reduce bloodshed and risk of failure to a minimum by utilizing the help of Frenchmen who were then in the service of the Vichy Government. Into this scheme of things there swam quite unexpectedly as I shall presently relate the very important figure of Admiral Darlan.

I do not at all wonder that this Darlan business has caused a good deal of Last week LIFE published for the first time one of the secret speeches made by Mr. Churchill to closed sessions of the House of Commons during the war. That historic address concerned principally an explanation of the fall of Singapore. Herewith LIFE presents another such secret speech by Mr. Churchill, also never before published. This address was made to the House of Commons on Dec. 10, 1942, a month and two days after the Allied landings in North Africa, and is an answer to the protests aroused by Allied dealings with Admiral Darlan, No. 2 man of the Vichy regime and an open advocate of collaboration with Germany. In referring to these eventful utterances, Mr. Churchill states, "They are far more interesting than anything that could be written subsequently about these tremendous situations. The effect they produced upon the House of Commons was of course decisive, and all opposition and most of the criticism faded away before the gravity of events." As straightforward documents of living history, these speeches will doubtless come to be considered among the most significant commentaries of the war.

concern in this country, and I am glad to give an explanation of it. The question however which we must ask ourselves is not whether we like or do not like what is going on, but what are we going to do about it. In war it is not always possible to have everything go exactly as one likes. In working with allies it sometimes happens that they develop opinions of their own. Since 1776 we have not been in the position of being able to decide the policy of the United States. This is an American expedition in which they will ultimately have perhaps two or three times as large ground forces as we have, and three times the air force. On sea the proportion is overwhelmingly in our favor, and we have of course given a vast amount of organization and assistance in every way. Nevertheless the United States regards this as an American expedition under the ultimate command of the President of the United States, and it regards Northwest Africa as a war sphere which is in its keeping just as we regard the Eastern Mediterranean as a theater for which we are responsible. We have accepted this position from the outset and are serving under its command. That does not mean we have not got a great power of representation, and I am of course in the closest touch with the President. It does mean however that neither militarily nor politically are we directly controlling the course of events. It is because it would be highly detrimental to have a debate upon American policy or Anglo-American relations in public, that His Majesty's Government have invited the House to come into Secret Session. In Secret Session alone can the matter be discussed without the risk of giving offense to our great ally and also of complicating the relationships of Frenchmen, who, whatever their past, are now firing upon the Germans.

I hold no brief for Admiral Darlan. Like myself he is the object of the animosities of Herr Hitler and of Monsieur Laval. Otherwise I have nothing in common with him. But it is necessary for the House to realize that the government and to a large extent the people of the United States do not feel the same way about Darlan as we do. He has not betrayed them. [Darlan had broken his 1940 promise to turn the French fleet over to the British.—ED.] He has not broken any treaty with them. He has not vilified them. He has not maltreated any of their citizens. They do not think much of him, but they do not hate him and despise him as we do over here. Many of them think more of the lives of their own soldiers than they do about the past records of French political figures. Moreover the Americans have cultivated up to the last moment relations with Vichy, which were of a fairly intimate character and which in my opinion have conduced to our general advantage. At any rate the position of the Americans at Vichy gave us a window on that courtyard which otherwise would not have existed. Admiral Leahy has been Ambassador to Vichy until quite recently. He lived on terms of close intimacy with Marshal Pétain. He has at all times used his influence to prevent Vichy France becoming the ally of Germany

ASK YOUR DOCTOR!

ON DEC. 10, 1942, the day this speech was made, Allied forces which had landed at Casablanca, Oran, Algiers and Bône were within 25 miles of Tunis and Bizerte on the strategic Tunisian peninsula. The British troops who had broken through on Nov. 2 at El Alamein, 80 miles west of Alexandria, had chased Rommel's vaunted Afrika Korps 700 miles to westward across Cirenaica.

or declaring war upon us when we have had to fire on Vichy troops at Oran or Dakar, in Syria or in Madagascar. [The Prime Minister refers here to the British naval attack on the French at Oran in July 1940, just after the fall of France, when the British sank or damaged five French warships and prevented them from joining the Germans; the abortive raid on Dakar by British and Free French forces in September 1940; the capture of Syria by British and Free French in June and July 1941; and the seizure of Madagascar by the British from the Vichy French in 1942.—ED.] On all these occasions I have believed, and have recorded my opinion beforehand, that France would not declare war; but a factor in forming that opinion was the immense American influence upon all Frenchmen, which influence of course increased enormously after the United States entered the war. Admiral Leahy is a close friend of President Roosevelt and was recently appointed his personal Chief of the Staff. [Leahy was made U. S. Ambassador to Vichy in November 1940, was recalled by U. S. in April 1942 as protest against Germans' putting Laval in power.—ED.] The attitude of the United States executive and State Department toward Vichy and all its works must be viewed against this background.

Since we broke with Vichy in 1940, this country has had no contacts with French North Africa, or only very slender and hazardous secret contacts. The Americans on the other hand have roamed about Morocco, Algiers and Tunisia without the slightest impediment, with plenty of money and with a policy of trade favors to bestow. They have worked all this time, both before and after they came into the war, to predispose French North Africa to them, to have the closest observation of the country, to have a strong footing there and to make all kinds of contacts with all kinds of people, especially important military and civil functionaries. When we began to plan this expedition with them they redoubled their efforts not only to acquire information and to create good will but also to make a regular conspiracy among the high French officers there to come over with their troops to the Allies, should an American landing take place.

French friendliness to Americans was anticipated

Great Britain is supposed in American circles to be very unpopular with the French. I do not think it is true, and certainly our troops have had the very best reception in Northwest Africa once we got ashore. Nevertheless as we had been firing on the French on so many different occasions and in so many places, it was not worth while to contest the point. The whole enterprise therefore was organized on the basis not only of American command but of having Americans everywhere in evidence at the crucial moment of landing. If you keep in your mind the supreme object, namely the destruction of Hitler and Hitlerism, there is no room for small points of national self-assertiveness. As long as the job is done, it does not matter much who gets the credit. We have no need to be anxious about the place which our country will occupy in the history of this war, or, when the facts are known, about the part which we have played in the great enterprise called TORCH.

I now turn to examine a peculiar form of French mentality, or rather of the mentality of a large proportion of Frenchmen in the terrible defeat and ruin which has overtaken their country. I am not at all defending or still less eulogizing this French mentality. But it would be very foolish not to try to understand what is passing in other people's minds and what are the secret springs of action to which they respond. The Almighty in His infinite wisdom did not see fit to create Frenchmen in the image of Englishmen. In a state like France which has experienced so many convulsions—Monarchy, Convention, Directory, Consulate, Empire, and finally Republic—there has grown up a principle founded on the droit administratif which undoubtedly governs the action of many French officers and officials in times of revolution and change. It is a highly legalistic habit of mind and it arises from a subconscious sense of national self-preservation against the dangers of sheer anarchy. For instance, any officer who obeys the command of his lawful superior, or of one whom he believes to be his lawful superior, is absolutely immune from subsequent punishment. Much therefore turns in the minds of French officers upon whether there is a direct, unbroken chain of lawful command, and this is held to be more important by many Frenchmen than moral, national or international considerations. From this point of view many Frenchmen who admire General de Gaulle and envy him in his role nevertheless regard him as a man who has rebelled against the authority of the French state, which in their prostration they conceive to be vested in the person of the antique defeatist who to them is the illustrious and venerable Marshal Pétain, the hero of Verdun and the sole hope of France.

Giraud wanted to be supreme commander

Now all this may seem very absurd to our minds. But there is one aspect about it which is important to us. It is in accordance with orders and authority transmitted or declared to be transmitted by Marshal Pétain that the French troops in Northwest Africa have pointed and fired their rifles against the Germans and Italians instead of continuing to point and fire their rifles against the British and Americans. I am sorry to have to mention a point like that, but it makes a lot of difference to a soldier whether a man fires his gun at him or at his enemy; and even the soldier's wife or father might have a feeling about it too.

It was the opinion of those officers who were ready to come over to our side that any admixture of de Gaullist troops at the outset would destroy all hope of a peaceful landing. Although we were prepared to bear down all opposition and in fact did overcome a very considerable degree of opposition, it is my duty to confess that neither we nor the Americans were looking for additional trouble, there being quite enough going about at the present time. The Americans, who, as I have said, were in command from the beginning, for their part refused to allow the slightest intervention of de Gaullists into this theater. There was, however, one French figure upon whom our hopes were set—General Giraud—a very senior French officer who was taken prisoner before the French surrender in 1940 while fighting gallantly in a tank and who a few months ago made his second remarkable and dramatic escape from German captivity. Giraud is an undoubted hero of the French army. General Juin, who commanded the important Algiers Garrison and Army Corps, was ready to act as his lieutenant. From our point of view there was nothing wrong with General Giraud. We therefore, at General Eisenhower's request, sent a British submarine under the American flag to cruise off the French Riviera coast, and on the night of November 6, two days before the dawn of Zero, we picked up the general, took him out to sea, transferred him to a seaplane and brought him to Gibraltar where he arrived on the afternoon of the 7th. We all thought General Giraud was the man for the job and that his arrival would be electrical. In this opinion General Giraud emphatically agreed and he made the most sweeping demands for plenary authority to be given to him as Supreme Commander in Chief of all the forces in or ever to be brought into Northwest Africa. Some hours passed in persuading him to reduce these claims to the bounds of reason.

Under the influence of General Juin, Algiers surrendered on the evening of the 8th. By the afternoon of the 9th General Clark had established Allied advance headquarters there. Here was found Admiral Darlan, who had been in our hands though treated with all consideration since the day before. He had come back after his official tour to visit his son who is said to be dying.

Casablanca landing was endangered

The landing at Casablanca was proceeding very slowly in the face of obstinate opposition. Large numbers of ships crammed with troops were lolling about outside the range of the forts and the U-boats were arriving on the scene in ever-increasing numbers. On four days out of five off Casablanca the surf is too great for landing on the beaches. The Americans had hitherto been astonishingly favored by fortune in the weather, but it might have broken at any moment, and, if so, the greater part of the armada off Casablanca would have to crowd into the Bay at Gibraltar or go on cruising about in the open sea among the U-boats. Although Oran capitulated on the 10th the landing facilities there would have been wholly insufficient to deal except very slowly with double the force which we had already assigned for it. Indecisive and protracted operations in this area would have put a peculiar stress on Spain whose interests were affected and whose fears and appetites alike might easily have been excited. It was therefore of the utmost importance to bring the fighting at Casablanca to a close as soon as possible. Of course, looking back on all these events after they have turned out right, it is not easy to recall how hazardous they looked to us, to the American Chiefs of the Staff or to General Eisenhower beforehand and while they were going on. The United States might have lost 10,000 to 20,000 men drowned by U-boats, apart from the fighting on the beaches and the fire of the harbor batteries.

Moreover the need for speed in the whole campaign was intensely felt by us all. Morocco and Algeria were only stepping-stones to the real prize which is Tunisia, which held and holds the key to the Central Mediterranean. To get eastward with the utmost rapidity was only possible if the French would not only cease fighting, but would abstain from sabotaging railways and roads and actively assist in unloading the ships. Delay in getting eastward would give the Germans the time to fly and ferry over a powerful army and every day lost might mean a week's heavy fighting with thousands of extra casualties. This was the situation on the 10th with which General Clark at Algiers and his superior General Eisenhower at Gibraltar had to deal.

had been invited to Algiers, and most of them had complied. Darlan, Giraud, Juin, Noguès, Chatel, and various others were gathered. Admiral Esteva, in whom we had great hopes, was held in Bizerte by the enemy. These Frenchmen wrangled together in the most bitter manner. But under the vehement pressure of the United States' General Clark for a decision one way or the other, Giraud and all the other French authorities present agreed to accept Darlan as their leader and custodian of the mystical authority of the Marshal and the honor of France. Darlan, although virtually a prisoner, at first refused to do anything but eventually, late in the afternoon, he agreed to accept General Clark's terms and to send orders by air to stop all French resistance to the Allied forces. All fighting at Casablanca thereafter ceased, though whether as the result of Darlan's order is not known, and the heavy American disembarkations began. The provisional emergency agreement made in these circumstances by General Clark and Admiral Darlan was approved, for what it was worth, by General Eisenhower. This was the beginning of the relationship with Darlan.

Darlan assumes Pétain's authority

Next day, the 11th, another great event occurred. Hitler overran occupied France in the teeth of the protests of the venerable and illustrious Marshal. This constituted a breach of the Armistice. The French officers considered themselves released from its conditions. All bets were off. There was a new deal. It could be said that the venerable and illustrious Marshal was no longer a free agent. His authority was therefore even more clearly held to reside in Admiral Darlan. Darlan was the only authority plainly derived from Marshal Pétain. General Giraud could not claim that authority. He had left France without the permission of Marshal Pétain and even, as was suggested, breaking his written promise to him. The remarkable thing is that General Giraud was himself impressed by the arguments of the other Frenchmen. He was quite soon convinced that he had no power whatever to influence the decision and, more than that, he seems to have felt himself at a disadvantage compared with these other Frenchmen who could prove they had obeyed the orders emanating legally from the head of the State.

Eisenhower makes agreement with Darlan

On the 13th General Eisenhower, with Admiral Cunningham [Allied naval commander of the invasion—ED.], arrived at Algiers from Gibraltar for the first time and began more formal conversations with General Clark, Admiral Darlan, General Giraud and other French high officers. His object now was not merely to obtain a cessation of resistance but to bring the whole French military and administrative machine actively over to our side.

On the 14th he telegraphed to the Combined Chiefs of Staff in Washington under whom he is serving that he had reached an agreement with the Frenchmen; that they would accept only Darlan's leadership and that Darlan would cooperate with the Allied army. The main point was that General Eisenhower recognized Admiral Darlan as the supreme French authority in Northwest Africa. This was not a treaty. It was an arrangement made by the American Commander in Chief in the field with the local authorities to facilitate the safe landing of his troops and the eastward movement of his army. Not only all the American generals but Admiral Cunningham, who knows the Mediterranean from end to end and who had been in the TORCH enterprise for several months, and also the representatives of the Foreign Office and the State Department who were present, strongly urged acceptance of the subsequent written agreement by their governments. All the French forces and officials came over to our side, thus relieving the Americans of the anxieties and difficulties which a forcible taking-over of the administration of these vast regions would have imposed upon them and us, and of the still more imminent risk of sabotage of our communications to the eastward. Giraud was appointed by Darlan commander in chief and hastened to rally the French troops to their new allegiance. The French garrison in Tunis, who had made no resistance to the German landings, which had already begun there, marched out of the city to the westward and took up positions facing east against the Germans. Fraternization ensued between the British, American and French soldiers. The populace, whose sympathies were never in doubt, but who in some places seemed sunk in coma and in bewilderment, became enthusiastic, and the whole enterprise proceeded with speed and vigor. So much for what happened on the spot.

In these emergency transactions His Majesty's Government had not been consulted in any way; nor did we know the details of all the violent events which were happening. The decision which the President had to take was whether to disavow or endorse what his general had done. He backed him up. The question before us was whether we should repudiate General Eisenhower at the risk of a very serious break with the United States. I have no doubt whatever that we should have been very careless of the lives of our men and of the interests of the common cause if we had done anything of the kind. However, on November 17 I telegraphed to the President in the following sense:

"I ought to let you know that very deep currents of feeling are stirred by the arrangement with Darlan. The more I reflect upon it the more convinced I become that it can only be a temporary expedient justifiable solely by the stress of battle. We must not overlook the serious political injury which may be done to our cause, not only in France but throughout Europe, by the feeling that we are ready to make terms with the local Quislings. A permanent arrangement with Darlan or the formation of a Darlan government in French North Africa would not be understood by the great masses of ordinary people whose simple loyalties are our strength.

"My own feeling is that we should get on with the fighting and let that overtake the parleys, and we are all very glad to hear that General Eisenhower expects to be able to order the leading elements of our First Army to attack the Germans in Tunis and Bizerte in the course of the next few days."

Roosevelt calls Darlan deal an expedient

On this the President a few hours later made the statement to his press conference which was published and gave so much general satisfaction. To me he telegraphed at midnight on the 17th the text of the statement he had just given out at his press conference:

"I have accepted General Eisenhower's political arrangements for the time being in Northern and Western Africa. I thoroughly understand and approve the feeling in the United States and Great Britain and among all the other United Nations that in view of the history of the past two years no permanent arrangement should be made with Admiral Darlan. People in the United Nations likewise would never understand the recognition of a reconstituting of the Vichy Government in France or in any French territory. We are opposed to Frenchmen who support Hitler and the Axis.

"No one in our Army has any authority to discuss the future government of France and the French Empire. The future French government will be established—not by any individual in Metropolitan France or overseas—but by the French people themselves after they have been set free by the victory of the United Nations. The present temporary arrangement in North and West Africa is only a temporary expedient, justified solely by the stress of battle.

"The present temporary arrangement has accomplished two military objectives. The first was to save American and British lives on the one hand, and French lives on the other hand. The second was the vital factor of time. The temporary arrangement has made it possible to avoid a 'mopping up' period in Algiers and Morocco which might have taken a month or two to consummate. Such a period would have delayed the concentration for the attack from the west on Tunis, and we hope on Tripoli.

"Every day of delay in the current operation would have enabled the Germans and Italians to build up a strong resistance, to dig in and make a huge operation on our part essential before we could win. Here again, many more lives will be saved under the present speedy offensive than if we had had to delay it for a month or more. It will also be noted that French troops under the command of General Giraud have already been in action against

HEADQUARTERS FOR TRANSPORTATION VALUES

HERE'S SOMETHING to remember when you are checking the prices you pay for things now with the prices you used to pay . . .

The general level of railroad freight charges today is no higher than it was before the war.

This prewar level has been maintained in the face of the fact that the prices of nearly everything for which railroads pay out money—wages, materials and supplies, taxes—have gone up, just as the prices you now pay for things you buy have gone up.

But the price at which the service is sold is not the only important part of the railroads' value to this nation. The adequacy and dependability of rail service are an even greater value.

It was to its railroads that the nation turned in the emergency of war to haul 90 per cent of all the war freight, 97 per cent of military travel.

And, for the future, it is upon these twin values of the rail system—top-notch service at rock-bottom cost—that the nation will rely.

the enemy in Tunisia, fighting by the side of American and British soldiers for the liberation of their country. Admiral Darlan's proclamation assisted in making a 'mopping up' period unnecessary. Temporary arrangements made with Admiral Darlan apply, without exception, to the current local situation only. I have requested the liberation of all persons in Northern Africa who had been imprisoned because they opposed the efforts of the Nazis to dominate the world, and I have asked for the abrogation of all laws and decrees inspired by Nazi Governments or Nazi ideologists. Reports indicate that the French of North Africa are subordinating all political questions to the formation of a common front against the common enemy."

It seemed to me that these statements by the President safeguarded what I may call the long-term policy, and we should do very well to rest upon them. I must however say that personally I consider that in the circumstances prevailing General Eisenhower was right, and even if he was not quite right I should have been very reluctant to hamper or impede his action when so many lives and such vitally important issues hung in the balance. I do not want to shelter myself in any way behind the Americans or anyone else.

Allies must honor agreement with Darlan

Now how far are we committed to Admiral Darlan? There is no doubt that if you ask for a man's help and he gives it in a manner that is most valuable to you, on the faith of an agreement entered into amid dangers which are thereby relieved, you have contracted a certain obligation toward him. I do not want the House to have any illusions about this. Both governments had undoubtedly the right to reject General Eisenhower's agreement with Admiral Darlan, but in view of what had happened it is perfectly clear that a certain obligation had been contracted toward him. More than that, we had benefited greatly from the assistance we had received. I do not consider that any long-term or final agreement has been entered into. I do not consider that the agreement is a document to be interpreted by legalistic processes. It is a question of fair dealing, and of this General Eisenhower is in the first instance the judge. He states that he does not consider that he is in any way bound permanently to Admiral Darlan. He claims that he has the sole right of interpretation. Darlan and the other French leaders are certainly in his power, and I for my part hope that he will interpret his obligations in a reasonable and honorable manner, even to a man like Darlan.

The French fight with the Allies

Since then events have moved at a gallop. The American and British armies, several hundreds of thousands strong, with all their complicated and ponderous tackle, have now landed and are in control of the whole of French Northwest Africa, an area over 900 miles long from west to east, with the exception only of the 20 or 30 miles of the Tunisian tip on which the Germans and Italians are endeavoring to build up an army and where the Germans are desperately and vigorously resisting. The whole French army and administration are working wholeheartedly on the side of the Allies. It is much too late for their leaders to turn back now. We need their aid, but they are in our power. The French troops have fought well on two occasions. On the first, 600 of them repelled a German attack without yielding an inch of ground although they suffered 25% casualties. On the second, supported by United States artillery and some parachutists, they destroyed a German battle group at Faid and took the position together with 100 prisoners, mostly German. They are guarding a long line from about 40 miles south of the Mediterranean down to the Tripolitanian frontier, holding back the German and Italian patrols and pressing forward as far as their strength allows toward Sfax and Gabès. As our troops come up we shall reinforce them strongly. Meanwhile Admiral Darlan succeeded in bringing the whole of French West Africa including the key strategic base of Dakar to our side against the enemy. I asked the President whether I might refer to certain secret telegrams and I have just received the following from him:

IN ALGIERS in December 1942 Eisenhower and General Clark met with Darlan, who was made chief of state of the French North Africa administration.

"You might add from me if you wish that General Eisenhower has definite instructions from me to enter into no agreement or bilateral contract with Admiral Darlan, but that all decisions by Eisenhower shall be unilateral on our part, and shall take the form of announcements from the military Commander in Chief of our armed forces. Furthermore I hope you will call attention to the fact that Dakar instead of being a menace is today open to use by British and American ships and planes in the prosecution of the war."

The advantages of Dakar coming over are enormous, and saved us a costly and perhaps bloody expedition. We are to have all the facilities of the port. The United States deals for us in the matter; it has adopted the claims the Admiralty made and we are to share with it all these facilities. The powerful modern battleship Richelieu can go to the United States to be completed. Other French vessels are being formed into a squadron which obeys the orders of Admiral Darlan. Darlan is actively endeavoring through his emissaries to persuade Admiral Godfroy, who commands the French squadron interned in Alexandria harbor, and is paid by us, to come out on our side. So far he has not succeeded but we are hopeful. Questions of honor appear to be specially complicated in this case. [Admiral Godfroy's squadron, which included a battleship and four cruisers, was caught in Alexandria and demilitarized at the time of the fall of France. In June 1943 Godfroy finally allowed his ships to join the Allies.—ED.]

All this is done in the sacred name of the Marshal and when the Marshal bleats over the telephone orders to the contrary and deprives Darlan of his nationality, the admiral rests comfortably upon the fact or fiction, it does not much matter which, that the Marshal is acting under the duress of the invading Hun, and that he, Darlan, is still carrying out his true wishes. In fact if Admiral Darlan had to shoot Marshal Pétain he would no doubt do it in Marshal Pétain's name.

Darlan explains his position

While all this has been going on, Admiral Darlan was naturally somewhat affected by the President's outspoken declaration and other statements which reached his ears. It may be of interest to hear a letter which he wrote to General Clark. We are not called upon to approve or sympathize with his position, but it is just as well to understand it.

"Monsieur le Général,

"Information from various sources tends to substantiate the view that 'I am only a lemon which the Americans will drop after they have squeezed it dry.'

"In the line of conduct which I have adopted out of pure French patriotic feeling, in spite of the serious disadvantages which it entails for me, at a moment when it was extremely easy for me to let events take their course without my intervention, my own personal position does not come into consideration.

"I acted only because the American government has solemnly undertaken to restore the integrity of French sovereignty as it existed in 1939, and because the Armistice between the Axis and France was broken by the total occupation of Metropolitan France against which the Marshal has solemnly protested.

"I did not act through pride, ambition nor calculation but because the position which I occupied in my country made it my duty to act.

"When the integrity of France's sovereignty is an accomplished fact—and I hope that it will be in the least possible time—it is my firm intention to return to private life and to end my days, in the course of which I have ardently served my country, in retirement."

[The Prime Minister then referred to General de Gaulle's attitude in terms which, though courteous and friendly, were critical. As General de Gaulle became afterward the head of a friendly state, the publication of this passage would be premature.]

During the last summer I have established close and friendly relations with General Eisenhower. I do not think I can give a better general picture of the situation than the latest message which he has sent to me. It was dispatched on December 5:

Eisenhower explains dealings with Darlan

"In the political field it is easily evident that our war communications system has not served us well in trying to keep you fully informed. This has been aggravated by the fact that difficulties in censorship here have permitted rumors to go out that have no foundation in truth. Among these stories is one that the American military authorities are dealing with Darlan about matters that have nothing to do with the local military situation, and are supporting his claims to a permanent authority rather than as merely the temporary head of the local government. Nothing could be further from the fact. Admiral Cunningham, Mr. Mack, Brigadier Whiteley and other British officers are kept closely and intimately informed of all moves made, both in our local dealings with Darlan and in the weary process we have been going through in straightening out the Dakar tangle. At every meeting with Darlan, I tell him that so far as this headquarters is concerned, he is at the head of a local de facto organization by means of which we are enabled to secure the cooperation, both military and civil, that we need for the prosecution of this campaign. He knows I am not empowered to go further than this. I assure you again that we are not entering a cabal designed to place Darlan at the head of anything except the local organization. Here he is entirely necessary, for he and he alone is the source of every bit of practical help we have received. If you will contemplate the situation existing along our lines of communication, which extend 500 miles from here through mountainous country to Tunisia, you will understand that the local French could, without fear of detection, so damage us that we would have to retreat hurriedly back to ports from which we could supply ourselves by sea. Giraud quickly gave up trying to help us and it was only through Darlan's help that we are now fighting the Boche in Tunisia instead of somewhere in the vicinity of Bône or even west of that. [On the day this speech was made the Allies surged to within 25 miles of the key city of Tunis where the attack stalled. In February the Germans launched a counteroffensive which was stopped at Kasserine Pass. The Allies did not capture Tunis until May.—ED.] It appears to us that both Boisson [Vichyite governor general of French West Africa.—ED.] and Darlan are committed irrevocably to an Allied victory. . . .

"The military prospects depend upon several factors of which the most important is our ability to build up fighter cover for our ground troops. This, in turn, depends upon getting supplies, establishing forward fields and maintaining a rapid flow of fighter craft until the battle is won. It depends also upon weather, until we can get steel mats on all our mud fields. The next thing we must do is to get forward every available scrap of ground reinforcement and replacements for troops now on the line, who need a short rest. In addition we must get our communication lines to work so well that all ground and air troops will be assured of adequate reserves when more intensive fighting starts again. The third great factor is our ability to prevent rapid reinforcement by the enemy. Our bombing fields are now so far removed from targets that the scale of our air bombing is not what we should like, but we are doing our best. Finally, during all this, we must provide adequate protection for our land and sea lines of communication, especially our ports. All these jobs strain our resources and keep everyone going at top speed, but we shall yet get them done. But all this shows you how dependent we are upon French passive and active cooperation and, so far, we have no evidence of reluctance on Darlan's part to help us."

It is very necessary that the two governments and, if I may say so, the President and I, keep very closely together, as we are doing. After all, what is it we want? We want the maximum possible united French effort against the common enemy. This I believe can be achieved but it can only be achieved gradually and it will best be achieved by the action of Frenchmen. If Admiral Darlan proceeds to render important services he will undoubtedly deserve consideration in spite of his record, but that consideration gives him no permanent claims even upon the future of the French possessions which have rallied to him, still less upon the future of France. The Germans by their oppression will soon procure for us the unity of Metropolitan France. That unity can now only take an anti-German form. In such a movement the spirit of the Fighting French must be continually in the ascendant. Their reward will come home on the tide. We must try to bring about as speedily as possible a working arrangement and ultimately a consolidation between all Frenchmen outside the German power. The character and constitution of Admiral Darlan's government must be continuously modified by the introduction of fresh and, from our point of view, clean elements. We have the right and I believe we have the power to effect these necessary transformations so long as Great Britain and the United States act harmoniously together. But meanwhile, above all, let us get on with the war.

I must say I think he is a poor creature with a jaundiced outlook and disorganized loyalties who in all this tremendous African episode, west and east alike, can find no point to excite his interest except the arrangements made between General Eisenhower and Admiral Darlan. The struggle for the Tunisian tip is now rising to its climax and the main battle impends. Another trial of strength is very near on the frontiers of Cirenaica. [At the time of this speech, less than two months after the start of the British offensive at El Alamein, the British under Montgomery had cleaned out the heavily contested territory of Cirenaica.—ED.] Both these battles will be fought almost entirely by soldiers from this island. The First and Eighth British Armies will be engaged to the full. I cannot take my thoughts away from them and their fortunes, and I expect that will be the feeling of the House of Commons. The House will, I believe, feel that it is being well and faithfully served by His Majesty's Government. I ask them to support us in refusing to do anything at this juncture which might add to the burdens and losses of our troops. I ask them to give their confidence to the government and to believe in their singleness and inflexibility of purpose. I ask them to treat with proper reprobation that small, busy and venomous band who harbor and endeavor to propagate unworthy and unfounded suspicions, and so to come forward unitedly with us in all the difficulties through which we are steadfastly and successfully making our way.

BOUNCING GENTLY FROM CEILING AND CHANDELIER, GIANT PLASTIC BALLS LEND GAIETY TO THEIR OWN COMING-OUT PARTY GIVEN BY GROUP OF CHICAGO ARTISTS

ILLUSION OF BUBBLE BLOWING is created as plastic ball rests on pipe of Actor Murray Forbes.

Life Tries Out a New Toy

Chicago artists play with giant plastic balls reconverted from war use

The occasional short peeks Americans have been getting into the bright new world of reconversion are fast becoming stares of bug-eyed fascination as manufacturers convert gas masks into powder-puff holders, air-raid helmets into hens' nests and snowshoes into cocktail tables. Latest such device designed is a seven-ounce, three-foot plastic ball, made by the DuPage Plastics Co. of Lombard, Ill.

The new plaything is derived from one of the war's most ingenious inventions, the solar still. Adrift at sea, a man would put sea water in the still and let the sun's heat distill the undrinkable salt water into drinkable fresh water. DuPage, which was caught at war's end with a lot of solar-still machinery and material, has bounced into peace with ridiculous ease, simply by ripping all the insides out of the solar still and selling the thing but nail-tough Vinylite covering. This makes a large ball whose exact place in the atomic age is yet to be determined. One clue to its future was provided recently by the Actors Club of Chicago, whose radio artist members gave a party at its clubhouse to test the ball's possibilities. Although it remains to be seen whether or not the plastic-ball pratfall and other exercises tried out at the party are to become common sights in the American home, the ball itself is apparently here to stay. DuPage is making and selling them at the rate of 1,000 a day.

PRATFALL on plastic ball illustrates one of the toy's most elementary uses. From a standing position the subject merely flops violently on it, is promptly jounced to the floor.

PLAYGROUND GAME of bouncing the ball under the leg requires extra-high leg-lifting. Ball will bounce well if blown tight. Otherwise it is as soggy as a wet paper bag.

BLOWING UP THE BALL requires a good set of lungs and about five minutes' steady puffing. In blowing-up contest Actress Angel Casey (left) won with puffs to spare.

BALANCING ON BALLS proved too much for party's three most tireless experimenters, Peggy Forbes, Angel Casey and Janet Niles, who fell off every time they tried it.

WHEELBARROW RACES were also tried, demonstrating conclusively that it was not easy for the person on the ball to stay there and hold skirt down at the same time.

BALANCING THE BALL on one's head proved as hard as balancing one's self on ball. Best balancers at party could only keep the ball on their heads for a few seconds.

PARENTS of the fun ball are Manufacturers Emil Ibach and Kip Livingston. Solar still (on table) has a funnel on its top and black cloth bag inside.

LACING UP NOZZLES of balls for the party was carefully done. The ball is laced much as a football but the job is easier, takes only a minute or two.

GUESTS arriving at Actors Club party found stairs billowing with plastic balls. Swan dive onto balls from top of stairs was discussed, not attempted.

Ah—a capitalist!

NOW—it's just a penny in a piggy bank. But soon his piggy will be full. Then the pennies will be taken to a real savings bank.

The bank will put his pennies to work. Some of them almost certainly will be invested in electric utility securities. Banks prefer these securities because sound business management has made them a dependable investment—as dependable as electric service itself.

So, the little boy has a personal stake in the electric power industry. Practically every American has—millions as direct stockholders, other millions as savings bank depositors and life insurance owners.

This is the American economic system. It's called capitalism. It's a good system. It helped make America great. And it will continue to open doors of opportunity for all little boys and girls with piggy banks.

BUBBLE BATHER at party found the ball useful. Bubble dancers probably will, too, because, when pricked by nightclub pranksters, it deflates slowly.
